Lady Wyvernes' Daughter.

CHAPTER XIX.

Only once did she ever ask of the future, and then he told her that, when all need for secrecy was ended, he should go to Madame Monteleone, and claim his bride. It was easy for the skillful, accomplished man of the world to deceive that innocent child, and make everything plausible to her.

Never in his life was the Count Rinaldo constant to any one so long as to his wife. Had she been rich, he would perhaps never have tired of her. As it was, when the first visitation began to wear off, and the future looked him in the face, he said to himself that he had done a rash and foolish deed; yet he never was anything but kind and gentle to her; he never relaxed in his visits, or spoke less tenderly to her.

But difficulties began to press upon him. In his first eager pursuit of Donna Maria he had involved himself largely in debt. While all his thoughts and energies were bent upon winning Inez, he had done the same, and now creditors began to press him on all sides. While he had continued his wooing of the heiress, they were not anxious; but now that rumor said he had ceased his attentions, they began to dread losing their money. It was not pleasant, whenever he returned from his beautiful young wife, to find his table strewn with bills and clamorous demands for payment.

One evening among his papers he found an invitation from the father of Donna Maria to a grand fete to be given at his house. Rightly conjecturing that the lady herself must have been the originator of the invitation, he accepted it. Donna Maria received him kindly, and told him this fete was given as a farewell to all their friends in Seville. They were going to live at Madrid; and it was possible, the lady added, that she might see the count there. Her manner was even flatteringly kind. With a low bow he declared that he should know no happiness again until he also was at Madrid.

Nature's Warning of Constipation

When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

Nujol is a lubricant, not a medicine or laxative, so it causes no griping. Try it today.

Again that evening, despite the beautiful young face that haunted him, the count said to himself that he had done a rash and foolish action. It was evident Donna Maria meant him to understand that he had risen in her estimation and held a high place there. Perhaps his absence had piqued her; certainly her other suitors did not shine in the presence of the high bred, handsome count.

It is possible to repent even of the realization of our most ardent wishes. Count Rinaldo found it so, although he never showed it to his young wife; a thousand times he wished that she had the wealth of Donna Maria, then he need never repent, need never leave her; but affairs were growing desperate with him, and he resolved to take counsel with his devoted and intimate friend, Luigi Carnello. To him he confided all. His imprudent marriage was already known to him; but now he told him of his embarrassed circumstances and the changed manners of the heiress toward him.

"What a pity it is you have burdened yourself with a wife, Rinaldo," said his friend. "I always thought it a most foolish thing to do."

"But she is so beautiful, and I loved her so," returned the count.

"You have indulged in a very great luxury, let me tell you," said his friend; "it is seldom that people in your position or mine can afford to marry for love. I do not see what you can do. You might follow the heiress to Madrid and marry her, but for the wife you have here."

"A wife that no one knows anything about," said the count; "that is a secret only known to you."

Then the two men paused and looked at each other. In the counsels of the wise there is goodness and wisdom; in the counsels of the wicked sin abounds.

"The only thing I can see for you, the only way of escape is by freeing yourself, if such a thing be possible, from the tie you have contracted," said Carnello.

"I do not see how it could be done," was the reply of the man who, three months ago, had declared he must win his love, or die.

"Fortunately for you," said Luigi, "your wife seems to be a simple, unsuspecting child. It would be easy to deceive her, if you like to do so."

"I would not hurt her for the world," cried the count.

"There is no need for that," said his friend; "it can be managed; and she, far from suspecting you, will mourn over you as one of the best and truest of men—one whom the gods loved, and so died young."

"But I love her still," he said. "I do not like to leave her."

"In that case, why waste my time and yours," said Luigi. "The alternatives lie very plainly before you. If you remain here you will certainly be imprisoned for debt, and so lose everything. Even if you do remain, you cannot claim your wife. You have no means of supporting her. There is nothing but ruin before you in Seville. Free yourself; follow Donna Maria to Madrid; marry her, and you will be one of the richest men in Spain."

"You talk of freeing myself," said the count, impatiently, "as though it were easy to do so."

"So it is," interrupted Luigi. "If you will only follow my advice; but remember this—my brains are my capital; and, if our plot succeeds, I shall expect a very handsome acknowledgment of my skill."

Then, in a low voice, for the words had an ugly sound, the traitor unfolded his plan. At first the count listened impatiently; then the forcible style in which his companion spoke gained upon him. He sighed as he listened, and sat for some moments in perfect silence.

"It is a clever idea, certainly," he said. "But do not be impatient, Luigi. I do not like to think that I shall never see that beautiful face again. You think there is no fear of detection?"

"Not the least," replied Luigi. "That unsuspecting wife of yours will listen to me, and before she will make no inquiries; she will not dare to draw down the anger of her friends, when there will be no one to protect her."

Even his hardened heart softened as he uttered those few words. What had that innocent girl done, that she should be so cruelly deceived?

"Now, mind," were Luigi's parting words, "you begin this evening. We must have it all over in ten days, and you must go to Madrid."

CHAPTER XX.

While her husband plotted with his friend, Inez was wondering what made him late that evening above all others. She had something to give him—her first present to him—and she had spent many happy hours in preparing it. It was a simple, pretty gift, a woven chain of her own black shining hair. She pictured to herself how delighted he would be, how he would kiss her and thank her; "for he loves me so much, my poor Rinaldo," she thought.

At the appointed time she stood near the orange-trees, but for the first time he failed in meeting her. It was long past their usual hour when Rinaldo, with a strange look upon his face, stood before her.

"I was growing frightened," she said, springing forward to meet him. "Oh, Rinaldo, what should I do if anything happened to you?"

He looked at the beautiful young face and the love-lit eyes. Something manly and true awoke for one moment in his worldly heart, and he clasped her to him, saying that nothing could happen, and he would love her until he died.

She gave him the little chain, and listened in wondering delight to his praises and thanks.

"I shall never part with this, Inez," he said; "I shall wear it as a charm; it will keep your love always with me."

Yet he knew as he uttered these words that if his plan was carried out, he would never see his young wife again. He was a bad man, selfish, reckless, and unprincipled; yet not quite so lost as not to feel some remorse at the part he was playing. He looked pale and agitated, his eyes were dim and his smile forced.

"Tell me, Rinaldo," said Inez, suddenly, "what made you so late this evening?"

He did not look at her as he replied, that he was not well, that he had been suffering from a strange pain in his head.

"If you were to be ill," she said, in alarm, "could I not come to nurse you?"

Scientists Prepare to Observe Eclipse at Catalina Island.

Los Angeles, Calif.—When the shadow of the moon ends its diagonal dash across the Pacific September 10 next and strikes inland near Santa Catalina Island near here, pilgrims from all parts of the world will be on hand to watch the first total eclipse of the sun visible in the United States since 1913.

Regarded as the most important astronomical event of the year, the September eclipse will attract thousands of scientific men to southern California, and preparations have been made to facilitate the work of observers and to accommodate the various scientific organizations which will hold gatherings in this city in connection with the phenomenon.

While the total phase of the eclipse will be visible from Santa Catalina Island, several expeditions from American and European observatories will await the observation at Ensenada, Lower California, where the period of totality will last three minutes and 35 seconds, as against two minutes and 48 seconds at Santa Catalina.

Some of the scientists will photograph stars in the vicinity of the sun in an effort to substantiate the Einstein theory, according to which light rays, being matter and therefore subject to the pull of gravitation, are deflected from their course by the proximity of a heavenly body.

Other observers will devote their attention to the corona, the golden emanation which extends outward from the sun past the border of the moon in every direction for hundreds of thousands of miles. With the spectroscopy they will watch for any chemical elements hitherto undetected in the solar atmosphere.

Still others will study the red prominences, supposed to be fiery matter projected from the sun's fiery interior with enormous velocity and extending through the corona, and which change their form so rapidly that they are never precisely alike during two consecutive observing stations at the same eclipse.

The exact moment when the apparent edge of the moon touches that of the sun will be noted by still another group of astronomers for the purpose of procuring more precise data concerning the orbit of the moon and in the hope of solving a lunar problem of some years' standing—that is, the small but as yet unexplained acceleration of the moon's motion in its swing around the earth.

Probably the largest band of observers, however, will come from that section of the general public which, though not deeply versed or interested in astronomy, periodically displays a feverish desire to occupy the ringside seats at the best between the sun and moon.

Observers of this class get the thrill of a lifetime, according to astronomers, who say that the approach of the lunar shadow, if watched from the high hills of Santa Catalina Island, will be a truly spectacular sight.

Looking northward about 12.50 o'clock on the afternoon of the eclipse, watchers of these hills will see the great dark shadow of the moon, more than a hundred miles in diameter, rushing toward them with incredible rapidity and overwhelming them with an abruptness that is terrifying.

While the total eclipse will not be visible in Los Angeles, nineteenth-twentieths of the sun's disc will be hidden, leaving only a narrow, bright crescent and plunging the city into temporary gloom.

Wants Typists to Use All Ten Fingers.

YRENCH INVENTOR SAYS SCHEME INSURES NEATNESS.

PARIS, May 26.—If a machine invented here and submitted to the Academy of Science is adopted, the typists of France will have to be careful how they hit the keyboard.

While the gray-haired members of the academy, the majority of whom never have used a typewriter, gazed admirably at the machine invented to control the work of typists, they also had to listen to a long discourse by one of their colleagues who has just discovered what is known as a universal keyboard, not adaptable for French typists, inasmuch as the letters are so set as to assure rapidly in typing in English.

A complaint made against typists is that no two hit the keyboard alike and that very few are able to use ten fingers at their work. The inventor suggests that naturally the first thing about his machine that is not in favor is that it insures clean, neat typing. Another feature is that it compels typists to use all five fingers of each hand alternately, that is five fingers of one hand and one of the other are used for a few minutes and then vice versa. He says that this is the only way to make typists use all ten fingers correctly, just as does a pianist. His method, however, is not taken too seriously by the typists, who, when in strike if such measures are adopted.

Paris Police Boxer Terror of Apaches.

PARIS, May 26.—Beware of France! The warning being passed out among Apaches in the downtown districts of Paris nowadays. Francois is a policeman and the amateur light heavyweight boxing champion of France. His boxing skill, punch and stamina have sent scores of amateurs and even a few professionals into dreamland.

Serious-minded writers suggest that in order to add weight to the warning which the Apaches are giving each other Francois receive of bold recognition of his skill by the creation of a police boxing school where the champion might teach his colleagues the finer points of using the feet and hands in the discharge of their duty.

These writers say that Paris could then claim to have a brigade of boxers who might easily put an end to
