FLOUR MILLS.

Ancient and Modern

(H. F. SHORTIS)

Certainly no country in the world is more prolific in stories, traditions and legends, than is Ireland—and Newfoundland is by no means backward in this respect. In my young days, we had no daily newspapers published in this country, and very few weeklies. Communications with the outside world were very irregular, and very few, except the better-off class, subscribed to a foreign newspaper. The Irish people, or at least a few of them, subscribed to such papers as the Public Opinion, Freeman, Cork Examiner and a few others, while another few received the Boston Pilot or some other popular American paper. These papers contained choice literature upon various subjects, such as the affairs in Ireland, the movements of the armies during the American Civil War, excerpts from pastoral letters of some great ecclesiastics, etc., etc. All these papers were authoritative contributions of the most famous writers and many distinguished scholars. Unfortunately the writers of the present day are too much given to sensationalism. As somebody has said—that is precisely the trouble with editorial pages of many newspapers and magazines of the present day. These writers read a highly colored account of a crime, a riot, a fire, a railway collision, a prison escape or some other news item; and forthwith set down and hand to the printers, not their well-thought out and reasoned opinions of the occurrence—not a statement which logically fits into or coincides with theories previously propounded by themselves; and apparently representing their settled convictions, but a mere series of shadowy impressions, the fleeting views inspired by the reporter's graphic story of meagre facts read out with a superabundance of fanciful fiction. As a result of this fashion of writing successive issues of the same paper or periodical, not infrequently furnish unnumbered instances of the most flagrant inconsistency; the editorial of to-day absolutely contradicting an equally ponderous and important one of last week, and judgements authoritatively pronounced in one number being masterfully reversed in the next.

As I said before, the old folks in my early days selected nothing but the choicest literature, and while they were waiting for the arrival of the Public Opinion, they were supplied with one of the vessels of our mercantile marine arrived with a supply, they invariably devoted their spare time during the long winter nights to reading aloud some beautiful fascinating story or calling up some reminiscences of the past. They generally took turns in reading, and as I look back they were indeed happy times. The large open grate, well filled with North Sydney coal, the great birch trunk, and the happy assembly seated round the comfortable fire, has left an impression that can never be effaced. It is by calling up these happy days, and the interesting and instructive conversations of our forefathers that has induced me to write the present article on the "Flour Mills both Ancient and Modern"—more particularly as we are about to have one erected in Newfoundland in the near future.

His Excellency the Governor has promised it in his speech, and the Government are ready to assist the promoters in every reasonable way to make this industry a success. No wonder that the people are delighted, for it is not four that makes the Staff of Life. It is the very essence of good government and political economy to encourage Home Industries, and more especially an industry that produces an actual necessity which every person requires and cannot do without. I could write a long story about the history of Flour Milling, which may justly claim to be the longest continued existence of any industry in the world. Its origin dates back uncounted centuries, beyond the reach of written or pictorial records, for grain was unquestionably used for human food in prehistoric times, and wherever grain was so used then likewise was the germ of Flour Milling. Wheat was a gift of the Gods among the Egyptians and Greeks, and among the Chinese wheat was a grant from Heaven.

It is unnecessary for me to give a description of the primitive ways in which wheat was milled by pounding for thousands of years, then crushing by crude stones until Roller Mills were evolved and everything performed by machinery. What I wish to tell my readers is the names of the men who were famous in America. I recently came across a list of these men of which I will now give, but what struck me most was that here in Newfoundland we can claim the very first Flour Mill on this Continent. The old records always claim them Grist Mills—that were used in the grinding of all kinds of grain.

In the instructions given to Governor John Guy before he left Bristol in 1610, was the request to erect a Grist Mill for the use of the colony. Not much is stated about this mill, but in the records of Governor John Mason in 1620, we have the interesting fact that the belligerent West Countrymen, who resented the assumption of authority on the part of the Crown by its Royal Charter, had attempted to destroy the property of the Company, and damage to the extent of £40 is mentioned as having been committed to the company's mill by incendiaries.

Early in this century remains of the company's farm were discovered on the Southern River, Clarke's Beach—quite near where the large bridge now crosses the road, the mill being built where there was a strong current, must have turned the wheel. I have been pointed out the exact spot where heavy pine beams were embedded in the mud, and were undoubtedly the foundation of the Mill.

In a well known history these beams were said to have been of oak, but such was not the case. Oak would require to be imported from England, but John Guy utilized his own sawyers on the pine trees, for which the Goulds Valley was famous one hundred years ago, when ship building was a chief industry in that vicinity, but this material is practically extinct to-day. The old mill stones were discovered, together with some old Dutch bells, which should have been placed in the Museum. I suppose they are now out of existence, but if anyone knows of them I would gladly find a place to preserve these historic relics.

AMERICAN MILLS.

The first mill ever known in the United States was Van Rensselaers, one of the Dutch settlers around the New Amsterdam, before the British took charge, and was called New York. The mill was situated on the Hudson River, up towards Albany. The first millwright came from Holland in 1681, with two small millstones, which cost 30 dollars in Holland money, or equal to $10. In the course of the next year or two a water mill was erected at this place, and in 1688 it was in charge of Barent Koeymans, who had been engaged for that purpose in Holland, with a salary of 30 guilders per year.

The Mill near Boston or the New England States was erected by John Winthrop, after a town meeting had been held at New London, in November, 1650. The inhabitants all promised to build the dam, and perform the heavy work in erecting the Mill. In case there was a flood in the river, or heavy ice, or any accident stopping the Mill, the inhabitants agreed (or were possibly impressed) to repair the damage gratuitously. It was also agreed at the meeting that no other Mill should be set up to grind grain within the limits of the town, so long as Mr. Winthrop or his men maintained the Mill in condition to grind the grain.

Nicholas Easton and his two sons erected the first Wind Mill for grinding grain in Rhode Island, in 1663. The boys directed the management of the Mill till 1675, when it was blown down. Nicholas Easton was a very important man, and became the Governor of the Colony. In all probability, he must have been a relative of Peter Easton, who became equally famous in Newfoundland for other work besides milling.

Now we come to Governor Benedict Arnold, who built a stone wind mill in Newport, Rhode Island. This was a circular building, 25 feet in diameter, and of the same height. It was supported by eight arches, resting on thick columns about 10 feet high, standing on a foundation about 5 ft. deep. The top of the Mill revolved, so that the sails would face the wind. This Mill long afterwards received a great deal of undeserved fame through being credited by unlearned antiquaries to the Norwegians. There was no doubt of its origin, as Arnold mentions it several times in his manuscript as "my stone Wind-Mill."

There was no doubt of its origin, as Arnold mentions it several times in his manuscript as "my stone Wind-Mill."

"Let antiquaries say what they will. It was nothing but an old stone mill."

The first great mill in Pennsylvania was built by John Printz, the Governor of New Sweden in 1633. It was a fine mill which ground both fine and coarse flour, and was running early and late. William Penn created a mill in 1681, with Richard Townsend in charge.

General Sir William Pepperell was a miller, and the greatest of pre-revolutionary soldiers. His mill was erected in Maine, and he appears to have made a fortune at the work, and became the greatest mill owner of the North East, as well as a merchant prince, and retired, probably the first millionaire of America. It was he who captured Louisbourg. In Cape Breton from the French, assisted in no small manner by ear own gallant Governor, Sir David Kirke, at Ferryland, who captured Quebec at the same time. Now I will bring my readers back to NEWFOUNDLAND.

In the year 1819 there was a great deal of interest taken in agriculture in this country, and the growing of wheat was encouraged by His Excellency the Governor and his Council at that time. I may here mention that the hardy and industrious pioneer, the late Mr. William Coughlan who, for many years conveyed His Majesty's mails round Conception Bay in all weathers, father of Mr. John Coughlan, the present equally reliable and careful courier, and chip of the old block, often told me that he raised wheat and barley of a very superior quality, on his farm, over 90 years ago, and was highly commended by the Governor and Council of that day.

We have it on record that John Mann and Thomas Ridley, merchants of St. John's, agreed to erect a grist mill, if they were adequately supported by the general public. This mill was erected at the foot of the Bonavista, near the present equally reliable and careful courier, and chip of the old block, often told me that he raised wheat and barley of a very superior quality, on his farm, over 90 years ago, and was highly commended by the Governor and Council of that day.
