British Gossip by Cable.

The two great happenings of last week were the royal wedding and the progress made with the bill for the local self-government of Ireland. London city results of the Companies of the Holms whether the claus wisely decided to leave to the decided to law to the test will be decided to law to the test will be decided to law to the decided to law to the fill miniations were repeated with but little diminished glory. The members of the royal family and the visiting soverained gay, have since been admiring it. On the wedding day, have since been admiring it. On the wedding day the whole police force of London was on duty during 24 consecutive hours. The thin red line was very thin, the men standing seak nome yards from the other. London decorated herself as well as she knows how, which is not very well. By far the most successful effort was one is. Lames street, which was turned into an arbor with wreaths and flowers and many rolored flags, the whole forming as arch.

The fall street is to suppose that the weak to make the print of many the bottest week London has ever known, and there has been no break in Parliament; the break of the consultations of a committee of the consultation of the consultati arbor with wreaths and flowers and many colored flags, the whole forming an arch, or rather canopy, the whole length of the street down which the pro-cession passed. The evening illuminations were on a great scale, and the spectators on a greater still. minations were on a great scate, and the spectators on a greater still. What poople came out to see by daylight was besides the decorations and each other, a procession of closed carriages containing royalties and officials of the royal household, escorted by meagre troops of Life Guards. When it was asked why the troops were so few, the answer was that the Duke of York was a sailor. The military authorities seem to have forgotten that he is expected to be some day King of England and Commander in Chief of the forces. However, the Queen it is believed, did not wish for a greater display, and her people seemed fairly well content with what there was. They received her and the bride and bridegroom and other great personages with respect, if with no great enthusiasm. There were cheers, but they were not universal, and people putno great heart into them. You might find an explanation in a Dublin paper, to the effect that the heat chilled the enthusiasm.

The week's visit of the Czarewitch has been the cause of the most intense anxiety to those who were responsible for his safety. It has been a rare holiday for the young man, and he has persisted in spending it as though he had not an enemy on earth. The heir to the Russian throne is an interesting lad. He was too young for the shock of his grandfather's murder to make a lasting impression on him, so he seems to have none of his father's dread of another Nihilist blow. His guardians this week have been unable to induce him to take what they regard as precautions of common prudence. Superintendent Melville, with a score of Scotland Yard detectives, was made personally responsible for guarding him during his stay in England. Several Russian detectives came to assist. It was a lively dance which the future Emperor of all the Russias led them, for he was careless as to where he went or how he rubbed up against the masses. The Sootland Yard guardians of the Russian Prince say that one thing, and one thing only, protected him from outrage.

went or how he rubbed up against the masses. The Socialand Yard guardians of the Russian Prime say that one thing, and one thing only, protected him from outrage while wandering about London. This metropolis is the only safe refuge remaining for Anarchists and Nihilists. If they should be guilty of any outrage in London, their last refuge would be closed to them. They know this and abstain. The danger which was really feared was at the hands of insane members of that ilk that ignore consequence.

A Threatening Letter.

On Saturday afternoon the Czarewitch, just before starting with the King and Queen of Denmark and the Prince and Princess of Wales for the Guildhall to partake of the Lord Mayor's sumptuous hospitality, received a mail packet containing a piece of a rusty iron chain and this letter:

"This chain is symbolical of the odious tyranny which prevails in your own gountry. I advias you to take advantage iff the time spent in this free country to see happiness and contentment which prevails reminder of the awful sufferings which your own people. Study the question deeply. Keep this chain hefore you as a perpetual reminder of the awful sufferings which your own people have to endure.

"It arouses one spark of better feeling in your breast I am satisfied. If, on the contrary, you continue persecution as your ancestors and forerunners have done, at an action of the warn you that all your guards will not suffice to prevent the execution of that rengeance which will then be your due."

The letter was written by a woman, and was addressed to Marlborough House.

A Wonderful Journey.

A Furious Politician.
The royal wedding has distracted attention from what has really been the stormicat week of the present session of Parliament. Mr. Chamberlain played more ment. Ms. Chamberlain played more successfully than ever before the tactics of goading the Irish members into indiscreet fivry. Then came the fiercest display of party passion and most violent outbursts of personal feeling yet exhibited. The language of the campaign has become brutal in many cases. Lord Randelph Churchill, in a political speech this week, summed up an attack upon Gladstone with the question, "Is he a lunatio or is be a traitor?"

It is charitable to suppose that the weather is partly responsible for this violence of language. It has been, perhaps, the hottest week London has ever known, and there has been no break in Parliament; labors on account of the social festivities.

Clause Nine.

The Khedive's Trip. The Earl of Rosebery, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, is credited with having advised the Khedive of Egypt to content himself with visiting the Sultan of Turkey, and to omit from his programme visits in Paris and London. Opinion in the foreign office attaches only slight importance to the Khedive's anti-English blas. If he makes himself extremely obnoxious, it is said, he will be deposed with the consent of the majority of the signatory powers acting in consort with England. content himself with visiting the Sultan of England.

Foreigners in France. The French Senate has voted unanimously the bill, already passed by the mously the bill, already passed by the Chamber of Deputies providing that every foreigner who shall visit France, not excluding artists who go to the country to exercise their trade or profession permanently, must obtain a permit from the authorities in the city or town where he shall settle. The penalties for oflenses against this law vary between 25 and 200 francs.

THE L. AND P. B. R.

The affairs of the road are commencing to get interesting again. Proper notices re the overdue rent were sent out from the city solicitor's office several days ago to the "Syndicate" members and their representatives. The time of grace expires at midnight on the 14th, and should the rent not be paid by that time London will have the road on its hands again on the 15th. Speculation is rife as to what the result will be, but the general impression is that the M. C. R. will pay the rent and continue to run the road, through the expursion season anyhow. Whatever transpires it is not likely that the road will be again tied up.
