"Well, now I will be quiet," said the women, seating herself, her eyes scintillating with an excitement which she could not control. "Here are some flowers for you. I will change with you." And she pulled out the flowers that fastened Valeria's collar, and thrust into their place those she had brought. "This is yours," tying around Valeria's arm a blue worsted cord that she had snatched from some one downstairs, and tying it so roughly as to hurt the arm she was decorating. "And these are yours. Everything I have is yours," piling into Valeria's lap the different objects that she had gathered about the house.

The nurse would have drawn her forcibly away, but Valeria would not allow it. Terrible as this intercourse was to her, she had too much compassion for the sufferers to allow them to receive any reproof on her account. Besides, there was something touching +O+O+O+O+O+O+O+O+O+O+O+O+O+O+ in the affection which these poor crea tures testified for her; for even the Signora Ellen would come out of her gloomy trance, and smile with a shy sweetness if addressed by her, would kiss over and over the hand she offered, and run with jealous haste to pick up anything she might have dropped. There was a fascination in it, those ruined minds; to find, where all seemed at first but dust and ashes some noble or exquisite monument still standing intact, or some fragment which had added the pathos of a tragical loss to its former grace; to study how, possibly, the original city of the soul might be built up again in a fairer order than before, and to see even these strange regions, as Dante went

KOMOKA.

A Komoka correspondent writes Died, at the family residence, in East Nissouri, after a long and painful illness, which she bore with Christian resignation to the Divine will, Mrs. John Lince, aged 57 years and 19 days. The dispensations of Divine providence are mysterious, and beyond our ability to comprehend. Only about a year ago Mrs. Lind was complaining of not feeling well, and her physician concluded that her trouble was an internal cancer, and she was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, and submitted to an operation. For some time after, apparently, she improved, and hopes were entertained that she would recover, but, after the lapse of a few weeks, she began to sink, and no tongue can tell her terrible sufferings until relieved by death. But no complaints or murmurings escaped her lips. A few moments before she expired she opened her eyes and looked imploringly at her husband, who stood weeping at her bedside, and then slowly closed them, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus on the morning c?
