Express Companies Always Have a Large Stock on Hand of Unclaimed Goods—How the Railways Get Rid of Unclaimed Articles.

Every day London street cars yield a rich reward, when the conductors at the end of their day's work take all articles found on the trolleys to the barns on Lyle street.

It is little wonder that "I can't find my umbrella" has been such a common refrain during the past spring. During the past three months since April 1 no less than 127 umbrellas have been taken from the cars and listed among the unclaimed goods at the car barns. Most people know where to look for their missing goods, and as a result 76 of these have been recovered, leaving 51 unclaimed umbrellas in the hands of the company.

A perplexing variety. There is a perplexing variety of unclaimed goods. The conductors have orders to bring in everything they find, even down to buttons, and as a result the collection ranges all the way from a cute little Teddy Bear to a switch of hair, which the conductor in his ignorance of feminine adornment registered as a "lady's wig."

Umbrellas predominate in the multitudinous array of goods brought in daily. In rainy weather half a dozen are brought in each day.

People Claim Goods.
The street railway company does not lose any sleep in locating the owners. If it is anything really valuable, people know where to find it, and this class of goods is invariably reclaimed. Nor is the company at all precipitate in returning anything. An accurate description is required of any article before the owner gets it into his possession once more.

Everything brought in is accurately recorded in a book for this purpose. Goods are kept for 30 days. If by that time no claim has been put in by the owners they are returned to the conductors who brought them in.

A few of the articles listed were: Parasols, gloves, raincoat, books, dinner boxes, market baskets, rubbers, belts, keys, grip, school books, fishing basket, handkerchiefs, watch, baby's stock, will power, bracelet, jewelry, and articles of every description.

There is not a day goes by but some three or four or half a dozen articles are brought in. None of the conductors regard it as a "rich scheme," for it is very seldom that anything of real value falls to their lot, but occasional they come in for a near little month's reward at the expense of the careless ones who leave things in the cars.

The Express Companies.
Generally there is another big collection of unclaimed goods at the express companies and the railway stations.

Just at present the Dominion Express Company have practically nothing on hand. Notices are out for a sale of unclaimed goods to take place shortly at Toronto, and everything has been shipped to the Queen City.

This sale is conducted so that all purchases are made on chance, and the buyer never knows what he is getting. Each article is numbered and is put up by auction without being seen. Sometimes very fortunate purchases are made, more often the reverse.

A Rich Find.
A well-known merchant is often cited, where a lucky purchase bought a trunk for $4.50, resold it for $200, and ultimately realized $1,800 on the contents. It was full of Irish lace.

Goods accumulate rapidly at the express company's offices. In many instances there are disputes between the consignee and the shipper, the former refusing to accept it, and the latter refusing to take it back. In the meantime the disputed article awaiting the payment of express charges. If these are not forthcoming in a year's time the goods are sold at the yearly auction sale. In many cases the goods cannot be delivered because there is no address and in others the address is incorrect.

As A Newspaper

The magazine section of the Saturday issue of The Globe is a fine example of what the art of the photographer and the engraver can do toward adding interest to the news of the day. The magazine section of The Globe has steadily developed until today it stands in the front rank.

A point worth noting about this section is that, like the rest of The Globe newspaper, it is truly national. It knows no sectional boundaries. Indeed, there are many places in Canada practically unknown a few years ago to many people, that have been made familiar to them through the magazine section of The Globe. The literary contents of the section are always well selected and varied.

Unclaimed goods is a source of worry to the officials, and they would be profoundly pleased if people would exercise more caution as to where they leave articles.

ALD. RICHTER LOST HIS CASE
Warned Council Against Making Local Improvements, But Advice Not Heeded.

A VERY LIVELY DEBATE
Ald. Stevenson Says All Sections of the City Should Be Treated Alike—Ald. Morgan of Same Opinion.

Local improvements started another debate last night at the city council, and Ald. Stevenson and Ald. Richter had a lively debate on this now favorite topic of debate.

The now of oratory started when Ald. Tancock read the report of No. 2 committee, recommending the passing of "what is here going to be a stop to this," asked Ald. Richter, "I certainly object to wholesale local improvements. I thought that this year we were going to go careful on this question, and not say so many pavements or curbs and gutters as formerly, but it seems as if this year is going to be as bad as any. Already $50,000 worth have been passed, and the end is not in sight. There should be some check on this work. The members of the council cannot vote intelligently on these matters. We do not know whether they are a necessity or not. I don't know where the board of works get their authority. If they have authority, there should be some higher check to it. I question the moral right of this council to saddle next year's council with such a burden. Why not leave these petitions over until fall and winter, when your departments are not so busy and a thorough investigation held as to the necessity for these local improvements? I certainly protest against this wholesale legislation."

Ald. Stevenson Defends Work.
Ald. Stevenson championed the local improvement system, and declared that not enough of this work had been done.

"Let us put down more local improvements," he stated. "The centre of the city has been well looked after, but we have neglected the outlying districts. Had we done the right thing by the city in this regard we would not have built up the suburbs. But we have allowed sewers and pavements and walks to be held up until a large number of people, disgusted at paying a large sum in taxes for the same privileges they could enjoy in the country for a great deal less, have gone to the country. Every man should have the same advantages as another. The north end and the other sections are just as important as the Queen's avenue. Your roads are a disgrace because local improvements have been held back. The storm sewers, an absolute necessity, were neglected, and you have had roads in consequence. Let us put down more sidewalks and curbs, and better roads—permanent roads and sewers. Make every part of the city habitable. The people don't mind the taxes, but they want something to show for the expenditure."

Treat All Alike.
Ald. Morgan also came to the support of the outsiders and declared that the citizens in the extreme ends of the city should be cared for.

"I do not want to limit any man in his desire for improvements," declared Ald. Richter. "We must, however, limit the amount of money to be expended in each year. People want improvements, but they do not want to pay for them. They only pay now about 40 per cent of the cost. If the expenditure was divided more equitably it would not be so bad."

However, Ald. Tancock's motion to pass the local improvement bylaws was carried.

As An Advertising Medium

Every month during the past eighteen months has shown a remarkable increase in the quantity of advertising carried by The Globe as compared with the same month in the previous year.

This proves two things—more businessmen are becoming newspaper advertisers and more advertisers are exercising discrimination in choosing their mediums.

It's the huge quantity combined with high quality of readers that wins for The Globe first place in practically every national advertising campaign.

The General Acoustic Company of Canada, Limited, Toronto: "We are perfectly satisfied that The Globe is one of the best advertising mediums in Canada."

At a meeting of the officers of the Seventh Regiment held last night it was definitely decided to go to Sarnia for Dominion Day.

The regiment will leave London on the evening of June 30, and will remain at Sarnia until July 3. On Monday evening next there will be a final drill before going to Sarnia, and the colors will be trooped in Tecumseh Park.

The regular weekly drill, held to Tecumseh Park last night, was very largely attended, and the regiment, under command of Colonel Campbell, practiced the movement of the company and battalion attack, a manoeuvre similar to that which would be followed in an actual engagement.

THE BELL RINGERS OF OLD LONDON
Organization of "College Youths" Dates From Time of Charles I.

London, June 20.—From time immemorial—from the days when Dick Whittington, sitting disconsolate on Highgate Hill, listened to the message of Bow Bells—much has been heard and written of the bells of London. London always has been a city of bells. They rang for festival or fast or funeral, for curfew or coronation. They rang from monastery or castle, from palace and tower. Rabelais, when he made Prince Pantagruel come sailing to the "le Sonnant," can have had in mind no other city than London.

Yet though the fame of Bow Bells and all the rest has gone to the outermost ends of the earth, one hears little enough of the hands that set the bells pealing.

Early in the seventeenth century even the bell ringers were by way of being an important body. In the time of Charles I. on Nov. 6, 1637, two noblemen, Sir Cliffe Clinton and Lord Breton, being enamored of the study of the sciences of bell ringing, founded the Ancient Society of College Youths, which was almost the first incorporation of bell ringers. Heard of in 1603.

Not quite the first, for even so early as 1603 there is some mention of bell ringers calling themselves "The Company of the Schollers of Cheshede." This company then disappears from contemporary history. Another, the "London Schollers," was merged in the College Youths, and the latter grew in numbers and power, and their name is familiar in churches all over England at the present day.

But to go back to the beginning of the College Youths. The name itself is curious enough. Yet, though the two noble lords aforementioned may have been college youths in a literal sense, the title of the society came from another source. For their earliest attempts at bell ringing the youths were wont to meet in the long since vanished Church of St. Martin Vintry, or College Hill. Hence the name of the society, St. Martin Vintry perished in the great fire of 1666, yet the city of London hears the College Youths still.

Members of the society still make music with the bells of many of old city churches. Only recently John Michael Cornhill proclaimed the fact that some of the Youths were celebrating the reinstallation of the bells of that famous church.
