FIGHT IS REOPENED

The Company's Explanation.

The attitude of the company was made known this morning by Mr. C. E. Ivey, collector for the street railway, in an interview with The Advertiser.

The company, he said, is now ready and willing to proceed without delay on the extension on Chesapeake and William streets to connect with the Oxford street line, providing that the city permits the removal of the Wellington street line from Wellington street to Richmond street, and enabling the company to utilize the special work in the shape of curves, points and switches now in use there, in the proposed new track.

The city switches also propose to leave the question of the Adelaide street crossing to the railway commission in its entirety, and would have the city join with the company in making the crossing on Sunday.

Prepared to Begin Work.

"The street railway company is prepared to commence work immediately on the Chesapeake and William street extension, connecting with the Oxford line, providing that the Wellington trackage is removed to Richmond street," said Mr. Ivey to The Advertiser. "If this removal is permitted, the city switches and points will not be required in relaying the line on Richmond street, and will be available for immediate use in the new Chesapeake and William street line. In this manner we shall be able to complete the line and have it in operation by the end of the year.

"The whole question hinges on the special work, and if we cannot make use of that available, we will be obliged to have the city and we are informed that such orders cannot be filled within five months. The whole extension would therefore have to be abandoned on this account."

ADADELTA STREET CROSSING

"We are perfectly willing to leave the question of the Adelaide street crossing to the railway commission, and to have that body decide the whole matter, including the cost of a viaduct. We are opposed to a level crossing over the P. R. because of the danger to the lives of our passengers and of the public must be safeguarded. Under present conditions street cars in London make three crossings of railway tracks every two minutes from 6 o'clock in the morning until midnight, and as 7,000,000 people are carried a year, it may be readily seen that hundreds of people are seated upon railway diamonds throughout the day."

"The subject of efficiency in the service also enters into the question, and the people of London are already aware that level crossings are not desirable, and that the lives of our passengers and of the public must be safeguarded. Under present conditions street cars in London make three crossings of railway tracks every two minutes from 6 o'clock in the morning until midnight, and as 7,000,000 people are carried a year, it may be readily seen that hundreds of people are seated upon railway diamonds throughout the day."
