MR. McHARG, in his narrative, shows himself a close and intelligent observer, and possessed of the ability to record his observations and experiences in good literary form, so that he enlists and holds the reader's interest from the first page to the last. Not only are the details of life in camp and on the march and in the thick of battle graphically told, but the author exhibits a comprehensive grasp of the whole situation, and gives a concise and satisfying history of Lord Roberts' famous advance on Pretoria, in which our Canadians won their laurels. A sketch-map of the field of operations, tracing the movements of the regiment, and an excellent series of diagrams of the various engagements in which it participated, add much to the interest and value of the volume.
