WHITE SOX OWNER HAS EXPENSIVE CLUB

Owner Comiskey has spent a fortune to put the White Sox on top.

He paid $50,000 in cold cash for Eddie Collins. The release of Joe Jackson cost $30,000. Commy paid $11,000 for Eddie Murphy, a bench warmer. He bought Ray Schalk for $8000. A $5000 bank roll was handed over for Shortstop Risberg, while a similar amount procured Pitcher Williams.

Including the money paid for other members of the team, Commy has a $150,000 ball club. The players' salaries this year amount of $125,000, yet the White Sox have made a barrel of money for the Old Roman. The receipts in Chicago exceed $200,000, of which 10 per cent. has been given to the Red Cross. The White Sox also have drawn big money away from home.

Wooden Club Play.

In driving, I strive particularly to make the descent of my stroke the same as the ascent. I consider my swing as a whole with two equal parts, and my object is to make these halves identical; that is, when I go back, my right elbow is in my right side, my left arm almost straight; when I follow thru my left elbow is in my left side and my arm almost straight. Also, on the backward stroke, my right knee braces, and the same work is performed by my left knee on the follow thru.

Walter Hagen, one of our most famous home-bred professionals, plays a splendid wooden club game. In my mental picture of him, he hits from a "take-off." He puts his right foot far back, throws his club-head thru with his whole strength, following after; his follow thru is very full, except that he is careful to avoid the stiff arm. His method illustrates what I mean when I say that a player should swing his arms independently of the body, until he feels the club-face meeting the ball; the strength of the body must follow—not precede—the actual contact of club-face and ball.

One must be particularly careful in this regard when playing a full wooden shots in a wind, for there is something in the rustling air that seems to unsteady a player, and tends to make him rush his shots. That is, he tries to hit the ball too hard, and in such attempt his strength gets away from him, and its full force is somewhat dissipated before the meeting of club-head and ball—his hands are forced from the downward stroke, and a miserable slice is the result. It is one of the most common errors to fail to wait for the club-head when playing in a wind, and this tendency applies in a greater or lesser degree when the wind is heavy, or light, and is something to be remembered even on comparatively still days.

This is the idea to bear in mind: Be sure to get the club-head on the ball before you put the real body strength into the shot.

It is a strange thing, but the beginner usually finds the iron club easier than the wooden, and in consequence he neglects the driver and the brassie for so long a time that he never really conquers them. This is a great pity, for the wooden shot is really the easiest one of the game, and all that is necessary to learn it is a little patience in foregoing temporary advantage, and a little courage in facing the initial difficulty. The iron club as a driver is a deceptive tool; it is really a thing of fine points for very special work, and on a first-class course was never intended to do the work of a wooden club.

The wooden club is played for distance, and, rightly executed, its reach must always be greater than that of any iron club. Of course, an iron club can do excellent makeshift work on a dry course, where one can play for a r and thus utilize the superior direction of the iron, but such a course is not in championship condition, and the goo golfer must learn to use each club for its legitimate work.

A good hole is not complete without a good tee shot, and a testing course demands a good drive. I have found the following ideas of practical benefit in the execution of a drive:

The imaginary line to the hole is a straight one leading from a point behind the ball thru it to the hole. Therefore, I place the club-head back of the ball at right angles to the imaginary line to the hole.

At the start let the shoulder be parallel with the imaginary line; at right angles to the line going back, and at right angles going thru.

During the progress of the stroke pull the club-head down with the left hand until it meets the ball fairly; the result will be a bent follow thru, and the body will go right into the blow.

Relax, keep the muscles loose and let the stroke be rhythmical.
