DEAD BEFORE HE COULD TURN OFF TAP

Montreal Man Wet Towel to Ease Pain in Head and Fell in Death.

Montreal, Aug. 18.—With the kitchen sink overflowing and a wet towel clamped in his left hand, Alfred Larocque, forty-two years old, was found dead in his home in Queen Street, by his wife. Ten minutes before he had left in high spirits and apparently good health.

Larocque, who was a foreman wireman, in the employ of the Light, Heat & Power Company, leaves his wife and two children, the youngest being barely three months old.

He and his wife and children went to his father-in-law's house, nearly opposite their home and towards the end of the afternoon, when they announced their intention of leaving, the father-in-law, Mr. Courtemanche, prevailed on them to remain to supper.

Mrs. Larocque asked her husband to run across the road to get some food for the babies and he did so. Ten minutes passed and the man had not returned. Going around by the back way Mrs. Larocque peered through the glass of the back door and saw her husband lying in a heap near the sink. The tap was running and a towel soaking wet was tight in his death grip.

Summoning assistance, she broke into the house, a doctor was called, but the man was beyond aid, acute meningitis having carried him off in an instant. It is presumed that he was seized with a violent pain in his head as soon as he reached his home and was seeking a towel to bandage it when he was struck down.

AERIAL INSURANCE LATEST AT LLOYD'S

London, Aug. 18.—The recent activity in the aerial world has been responsible for the introduction of a new form of insurance at Lloyd's. Before the conquest of the Channel, the underwriters agreed to pay 40 guineas per cent. This was paid in the case of M. Brierot, and while in London his monoplane was insured for $50,000 against fire, theft or accident.

A member of a firm of brokers says that they expect shortly to do a large business in aerial insurance.

IT WAS REALLY DYSPEPSIA

Though They Thought She Had Heart and Lung Disease.

The case of Mrs. James Russell, of Armstrong's Brook, N.B., is typical of many really suffering from stomach trouble, who think the heart or some other organ is diseased. She writes:—

"Five years ago I suffered with pain in my heart which would leave me to weak I could scarcely walk; at night I would have to sit up in bed to keep from smothering. I was treated by doctors for heart disease. Then the pain moved to the shoulder and my left arm would be numb at times. Then the doctors treated me for lung disease, but the pain kept getting worse. At last a friend advised me to write Father Morrice's 'No. 11' Tablets. I got was I was suffering from dyspepsia. I got medicine, which consisted of a box of tablets. The tablets I took twice, when I was completely cured and have never been troubled since—two years now."

Curing the stomach puts the whole system right, and there is no quicker way to cure Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Heartburn and the other forms of stomach trouble than by taking Father Morrice's "No. 11" Tablets, 50c. at your dealer's, or from Father Morrice Medicine Co., Ltd., Chatham, N.B.

BELLEVILLE GIRL IS DESERTED

Lured Into Marriage By Man Who Took Her Money and Left Her Stranded.

Belleville, Ont., Aug. 17.—All Belleville is talking of the heartless and cruel deception practiced by an unscrupulous adventurer upon Miss Dora Frost, a daughter of the late John Frost, who was during his life one of the foremost Liberal politicians of West Hastings, and a prominent merchant of this city.

At her father's death, Miss Frost, one of Belleville's most beautiful and cultured young ladies, inherited a small estate, and was known as a journey to California and there made the acquaintance of a young man who gave the name of Kelly and claimed to be a member of a well known English family, living at Stratford-on-Avon, and the prospective owner of a large estate there. His bearings and credentials bore out his claims, and when, after a very brief but ardent courtship, he proposed marriage, the young lady accepted him and the union quickly followed.

In Belleville the romance attracted considerable interest and everyone who knew the young lady was rejoiced to hear that she had made such an excellent match. Some of the factious ones were quick to remark that the marriageable young men of Belleville with their want of enterprise and gallantry in permitting such a desirable belle to be won by an outsider.

The reputed Englishman brought his bride back to Belleville and soon charmed her with his manner and the stories of his connections and possessions in the Old Country, to which he announced he would remove with his wife as soon as their farewells were made in Belleville. He, however, put off the day of their departure and absented himself for a time, ostensibly going to Cobalt to look up some mining ventures. When he came back he reported that he had found some wonderful chances to make money and upon the strength of it, induced his wife to put her money into his hands for investment. Then on some pretext he took her to Denver, and word has since reached Belleville that he left her there stranded and helpless, without a dollar to her name. He disappeared and no one knows whether he went.

Investigations of his claims as to his standing in the Old Country have proved them to be false in every particular. It appears that Miss Frost has fallen a victim to the wiles of a shrewd man good-looking sharper, so many other young women have done, and great sympathy is expressed for her here. Some of her friends are talking of swift measures of revenge should the young man ever be located.

AWAIT NEXT STEP BY BERESFORD

London, Aug. 17.—Now that Lord Charles Beresford has failed in his attack upon the admiralty the next step in his campaign is awaited by the country with much curiosity and some apprehension. He can say, of course, that his case has been thrown out by a jury of associates of the accused. But it will be a serious step for him to take if he carries out his threat, and discloses the full details of defects in the country's defenses.

Three boys who were gathering wild cherries at Hanover, N. J., were startled by a bird that flew from the ground just ahead of them, and on looking about discovered not only the bird's nest but 220 worth of silverware. The silverware was covered with gold, and it is thought was hidden by burglars, who afterwards failed to find the spot.

Don't think a man is always in the wrong because he doesn't agree with you.

AMBASSADOR BRYCE SEES GREAT DEVELOPMENT HERE

Calm, Measured Speech, But Bright in Import, is Delivered Before Big Gathering of Canadian Club—St. John and Its Great Importance in Commercial World.

The Canadian Club has every cause for congratulation today on the fact that they have given St. John people an opportunity to see and hear the Right Honorable James Bryce, British Ambassador to the United States. The author of The American Commonwealth was the guest of honor at a club luncheon last evening and was received with the utmost enthusiasm. His address dealt with Canada's Chance for Possibilities, while it was very guarded and diplomatic, as might be expected from a gentleman of Mr. Bryce's position, it was nevertheless a thoughtful and earnest exposition of the gospel of hope and confidence in our great Canadian heritage.

It has been long since any speaker in St. John has received so great a welcome. The cheering, the outbursts of applause, the atmosphere of sympathy and the keen attention made the occasion one of rare enjoyment. Mrs. Bryce, who received an ovation, made a brief speech of her own which was received with the warmest appreciation.

During the evening letters of regret at their inability to attend were read from C. S. L. Raymond, president of the Woodstock Canadian Club; Hon. Dr. Laury, commissioner of agriculture; Hon. W. C. H. Grimmer, surveyor-general; and Hon. Geo. E. Foster. Members of the government of agriculture; Hon. W. C. H. Grimmer, surveyor-general; and Hon. Geo. E. Foster. Members of the government of agriculture; Hon. W. C. H. Grimmer, surveyor-general; and Hon. Geo. E. Foster.

Rev. R. A. Armstrong offered grace and after the luncheon President C. B. Allan introduced the guest of the evening. The president felt it was a special honor to have the ambassador here.

The Nickel orchestra, augmented by the choir, played the following excellent programme during the luncheon: Overture—Post and Prentiss. Supper Prize Song—The Melodist. Spanish Carols—La Paloma. Intermezzo—Cavalleria Rusticana. Rev. R. A. Armstrong offered grace and after the luncheon President C. B. Allan introduced the guest of the evening. The president felt it was a special honor to have the ambassador here.

An Ovation. Mr. Bryce on rising received a veritable ovation. It was quite evident from the outset that he was addressing an enthusiastic audience and to the applause of the echo the sentiments to which he would give expression. Lieutenant-Governor Tweedie called for three cheers for the ambassador which were given with hearty good will. His excellency was attired in a light grey business suit and wore a small boutonniere. He spoke slowly and distinctly, used no gestures and impressed one rather as a plain man in a heart to heart talk with his friends rather than as an orator who dwelt on national subjects. He thanked those present for their presence and was substantially his first visit to St. John and he had been greeted as an old friend. Thirty-nine years ago he first visited the city when it was a frontier town of less than 3,000 people.

Three-quarters of his work in Washington was on behalf of Canadians. We had a frontier to the north of the United States of at least 3,000 miles and many questions are arising between these two great peoples of which it would be to the great benefit of a representative of his majesty to have a direct knowledge and of the places and people concerned. For that reason he always liked to take advantage of every opportunity to come to Canada. He was especially pleased to be in St. John, a city founded by the United Empire Loyalists of 1783 and whose descendants had done much to make the city what it is.

He was glad to see the city prospering and thankful for the opportunity afforded him of seeing what an admirable port we have here, the terminus of two great railway systems and the probable terminus of a third and with an ever increasing number of transatlantic steamship linesplying here he was sure that with these great advantages the port, city and province would go on and increase more in the next ten, twenty or thirty years than they had in the last century. He had seen the city, the harbor and the beautiful river and he had learned that the stories he had heard about St. John's progress were not due to the patriotic advertising of the city but were facts.

Congratulations for St. John. As to the river, Mr. Bryce said he had never seen a more beautiful river and congratulated the people of St. John upon it. He would also like to congratulate as upon doing what so many of the old world cities had failed to do in securing such a fine, well situated and beautiful piece of ground for our public park.

Glad as he was to be in St. John he regarded it as a particular privilege and pleasure to be able to address the Canadian Club. He was always greatly struck by the important function exercised by the Canadian club in inculcating the idea of Canadian unity. The movement was a great and important one and who ever started it deserved the gratitude of all Canadians because he knew of no country where it was more necessary to give expression to this sentiment of unity.

Canada was a country of very peculiar shape. It is a territory of immense length stretching from ocean to ocean, parts of it were and are but sparsely populated and being so long and narrow there were many philosophical politicians who thought it could be impossible to keep it together in political union. There are many diversities of natural features and of industries and of modes of life within its vast area. Two great languages are spoken in it, not including others which are used in certain localities. In this connection he referred to the presence of Gaelic in certain parts of Nova Scotia and to the fact that he, himself, had visited an Icelandic settlement near Winnipeg where the Icelandic language was spoken. These great differences gave rise to the opinion that the confederation of Canadian provinces could not hold together, but the work of unification, which was so largely helped by the great transcontinental railways, now being completed by the growth of population in the central part of the dominion half way between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and has been still more advanced and still more fully completed by the patriotic ardour of the Canadian people. This devotion to a common country and common national aspiration finds an embodiment in these Canadian Clubs.

Says Clubs Encourage Union

There are in Canada, and in all her provinces strong and active political parties. No country has been known to exist without political parties. They have them in the United States and in Great Britain and they are probably the cause of all our troubles in many ways are useful, but it is also desirable that people should not be too much divided upon party lines, and these clubs in which men of both parties meet and discuss subjects of common interest are a very valuable bond of sympathy and co-operation transcending all party lines and dedicated to the sentiment of national union. They also impress upon you and me the need of a sense of the magnificent future which awaits our country. They are the means of cherishing and developing good feeling between all Canadians wherever the national interests are in question, and also of cherishing and developing that sentiment of imperial unity which unites you, and unites you now more closely than ever before with the mother country at home and with the sister states such as Australia and New Zealand and South Africa, where the same British flag flies. The union of all these great dominions in one common imperial body, each part in sympathy with the others and each willing to help the others by each directing its own special affairs to the benefit of the whole, is the goal of its own political life in accordance with its own needs and ideas has been a magnificent creation of the last century and will, we all trust, grow even more perfect as the years roll on.

"On this let me say two things. One is that the full self-government which the great dominions enjoy is recognized by Britain as much as by you here to be one of the most effective methods for securing both your own welfare and the sense of imperial unity which binds together you and us. The other is that each and every effort which you and the other great dominions may feel disposed to make towards the common defence and the well-being of the present fabric of empire. The first principle of this imperial bond was free self-government. Great Britain had once tried in trying to coerce a colony but the freely and frankly gave self-government to all of the dominions where their population and their spirit warranted it. The result of this policy was plainly seen most recently in South Africa. There were those who thought it dangerous for Great Britain to give such a measure of self-government to South Africa where only recently British troops had been engaged in suppressing rebellions. He was a member of the British government at that time and he knew the experiment would be a success. It has, however, been proved sooner than expected. All look to self-government as the corner stone of imperial strength."

Canada's Present and Future

Mr. Bryce then went on to deal with Canada's present and future. He said: "For you in Canada it is an inspiring thought at the beginning of the twentieth century that you are working not only for the present but for the future, a future which is full of promise. The growth of the dominion in wealth and population has been wonderful and although population increases more rapidly in some of the new and fertile territories of the west than it does in these maritime provinces, the whole of Canada belongs to all Canadians and whatever benefits one part benefits the other. As this unity and strength of the British empire to which I have referred is a powerful factor for peace in the world and contains no element of hostility to any other nation, but rather a desire to be on good terms with all, it is pleasant to observe that the growth of Canada has been accompanied by constantly growing good feeling between Canada and the great republic which stretches to the south of her. Nothing has given me more satisfaction."
