

INTRODUCTORY

We have made our first venture in appearing before a kind public in the character of Almanac makers, and if its measure of success bear any proportion to that of our former works, we shall not have much reason to regret the step we have taken.

Of course our object primarily has been to make the great public more thoroughly acquainted with the virtues and excellencies of the "Lockman" Almanac, and we think we are in a measure successful in this regard. A great amount of information has been obtained from its pages, and it is believed that it is valued by the great household articles, we first they may be purchased into purchasing one of those indispensable articles of the present day, and we are proud to have a successor of whom we have no reason to regret.
