These Young Men's Suits Are Really Young Men's Suits

They are special models, originated expressly for young men.

The spirit of youth is incorporated into every line of these new models. The air of youthfulness they wear—and the air of youthfulness they reflect on the wearer—show how carefully the designer has caught the young man's ideals.

The patterns, too, are distinctly youthful—novelty weaves and colors that are most suitable for youthful faces and figures.

Every price—from $15. to $35.—represents honest value.

CHIVALRY
AND SPORT

Influence of Women in England

SOME ANCIENT HISTORY

Sport Writers of Former Days
Had Some Picturesque Encounters to Report

Without the patronage and gracious presence of ladies, sport would have made slow progress in England. Although in the days of chivalry their active participation was not great for many pastimes of the period required mainly strength and daring; it was the influence of fair ladies that counted. Much pleasure can be derived from letting the imagination dwell on the knightly scenes and emotional spectacles of feudal times. Who cannot sympathize with him, who, fresh from the enchanted pages of Froissart, exclaimed:
The good knights are dust,
Their swords are rust,
Their souls are with the saints, I trust.
Reluctantly, perhaps, it must be admitted that people are better, kinder, and more sympathetic nowadays than when, beneath the picturesque splendor of tournaments and jousts, there lurked much that was coarse in spirit and even sanguinary in desire. Few of the modern school of sport and athletics have much idea of the old style of tournament, which must have been a stirring spectacle. In "Ivanhoe" the vivid description of a passage arms impasses all who read that entrancing tale, and the versatile Lord Lytton, in the "Last of the Barons," draws a fine picture of the jousting that took place before Edward IV. Monarchs honored the strong, the brave, and the skillful for their valorous deeds in the tournaments, which were essential to the life of chivalry, but the most coveted of all praise was that which fell from the lips of love and beauty.

Ladies at Tournaments
Martial in character, and requiring much skill and dexterity were the tournaments of old. Ladies were nearly always the judges of the combatants' merits, and from their decision there was no appeal. Evidently they enjoyed the confidence of the rival knights, and their sense of justice and honor in abiding by the laws of the sport must have Erskins was able to continue driving Handy Jim in the 2.11 pace. Judges hesitated after declaring the 2.11 pace completed after the fifth heat, done in 2.18, with a sprint through the last quarter in 39.4 seconds, had been won by Colonel Franklin. Hydrick won the fourth heat, but was out-brushed in the fifth. After a delay, the race was held to be ended.

Great Scott, except in the second heat, when a path along the rail was blocked, had no trouble in leading the 2.18 paces home. He was second choice, Lady Richmond being the favorite.

GOLF

Brookline, Mass., Sept. 26.—Champion met champion today and Francis Outimet, America's National open golf title holder, added to his recent laurels by vanquishing Jerome D. Travels, the National amateur champion. Their match went twenty holes of varying golf before the youth prevailed. Outimet's victory marked a clean sweep for the players of the Boston district against those of New York in the singles division of the preliminary tie for the Leslie cup.

trials of prowess. The victorious knights returned to the barriers, and called out the names of their ladies before again facing the charge. At the end of the struggle the lord of the tourney ordered the banners to be folded, and the victor called out the name of a lady, who, as queen of love and beauty, presented the prizes. In the sixteenth century the last tournament was held at Westminster, the prizes being distributed by Queen Mary, her husband, Philip of Spain, being one of the combatants.

Jousts and Archery

Frequently the end of a tournament consisted of a friendly joust, or joute beyond the range of armor, were patronized by the ladies, despite the fact that on occasions a defeated knight on refusing to surrender, was slain on the spot. To the credit of the ladies be it said that the friendly joust, in which blood did not flow, was more dangerous to taste than the more dangerous contest. The sheer sport of the affair commended itself to ladies, and it is improbable that the knights would have shown any degree of warmth or enthusiasm without the stimulus provided by the supporters who encouraged jousts by their presence and appreciation of skill and dexterity. Ladies in the days of chivalry had ample occasion to spend much of their time in the open air. What with tournaments, jousts, archery, and hunting, they were indeed merry days for men and women.

Archery was one of the most highly esteemed accomplishments. Though not extinct, it cannot now be called a popular sport in England. Incidentally there are ladies today who are enthusiastic toxophilites, and whose skill in archery is amazing. At one time England's practice at the bow was so good that her bowmen—a fact which was demonstrated at Flodden Field, where the "arrows cloth-yard long" were used with great effect. Indeed, it has been said that love of archery and love of country were inseparable, and ladies of the fifteenth century thought of a man unlearned in the warfare accomplishment. This is but another illustration that womenfolk were far from apathetic in matters of sport and outdoor pastimes in the days of chivalry. A man was much more acceptable by reason of his proficiency in tournaments and archery than for purely intellectual attainments.

A Queenly Toxophilite

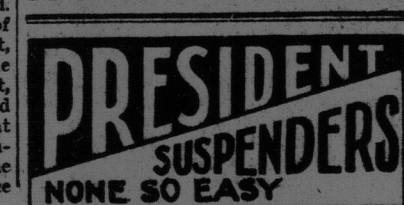

With the introduction and spread of the use of firearms became less popular. In the days of Charles I. and his parliament the arquebus had almost entirely taken the place of the bow. As a national sport archery survived for many years later, and Charles II. and Catherine of Braganza often practiced at the bow. The queen was patroness of the London bowmen, and took a keen pleasure in watching them.

Later in the seventeenth century a silver badge weighing twenty-five ounces was made for the marshal of the honorable figure of an archer drawing a long English bow to his ear, and the words: "Regina Catharina Sagittaria." The badge also bore the arms of England and Portugal. The Londoners were very proud of their skill, in shooting with bows and arrows, and at Westminster, Whitehall, and Greenwich, many keen contests took place on festive occasions. Those places are not now associated with merry sport.

California Bouts

FROM T. S. ANDREWS

Milwaukee, Sept. 26.—The boxing promoters at Los Angeles are to make an effort to reopen the game October 14. Tom McCarey, Cross and Joe Rivers for that date at the Vernon arena and expects to go through with it without any interference. There is no reason why they should not be permitted to go along as usual, for accidents are bound to happen, no matter what kind of sport. Many persons have been killed in automobile races, motorcycle races, baseball and football the past season, but nothing has ever been said about stopping those sports. Cross and Rivers will make Volgaist in Milwaukee any time, any place and for any purse, just to show that he is not down and out. A Milwaukee club is thinking of bringing them together. Why not have the winner meet Jimmy Britt?

MRS. MAUD SMITH AND THE SCOTT ACT

Sackville Post.—Maude Smith of Alouahagan has been violating the Scott Act. It seems Maude has been getting a case or two of gin occasionally to supply the wants of some of the people in that section of the county. It would be a pity if she had been doing a better business than usual of late, for complaints have been made, and the matter brought to the attention of the inspector who had the naughty Maude up before Magistrate Geo. A. Fawcett, at Middle Sackville a few days ago. Several witnesses were examined, and the majority admitted that Maude had relieved their thirst on one or more occasions lately, and as a result of this information Maude was condemned to pay a fine of $50 for selling and a similar amount for keeping for sale.

Officer Sullivan of Sackville searched Maude's house a few days ago, but at first failed to find anything. The officer was just about leaving when he noticed a peculiar chair upon which Mrs. Smith was seated. It is known as a barrel chair, and the officer at once had his suspicions aroused. He asked the occupant to get up but at first she declined. Finally however she did so and in the bottom of the chair the officer found ten bottles of gin, which he promptly took charge of. Some day soon he will have the pleasure of destroying it.

roskey, the California middleweight, at Oakland, Cal. The weight is to be 128 at 5 p. m. which means that the native son will go into the ring about 10 to 12 pounds to the good. It is a big handicap for a boy like Clabby to give, but his cleverness will no doubt carry him through all right. Two had that Jimmy has not got about 10 pounds to his frame. If he had he would be the champion without a doubt. At that he is as near the goal as any of the 108 pounders and must be figured on for the title.
