The train consisted of seven cars, all heavily loaded with passengers, all heavily loaded with passengers. The three rear cars, a diner and two sleepers, were not derailed. The control of the four cars were piled up in an indescriminate mass, and with the crushed freight cars took fire.

The engine, after russing into the switch, struck a string of freight cars, and with the first three coaches was piled into a heap across the track and caught fire immediately. The track was reported clear at the last station, and as the train was running about fifty miles an hour the open switch was not noticed.

It is probable that the exact number of the dead will not be known for several days, as the passengers here assert the bodies were cremated in the burning debris.

The following is a list of dead and injured sent to President Joseph Ramsay, Fr. of the Wabssh Railroad last night.

CONGSTREET'S ORDERS.

The Way Bis Soldiers Managed to Evade Them.

General Longstreet used to tell a good many stories to show that the men of his command always treated captured Union soldiers with as much consideration and kindness as was possible under the circumstances. He said that his orders on this point were very lain how proud he was of the record of his men on this point a listence employed in one of the departments at Washington interrupted him.

"Undoubtedly your orders were strict, general." he said, "but I happen to know that they were evaded. For example, in east Tennessee you ordered your men to respect the belongings of prisoners, and this is the way some of them did it: I wore a good pair of army shoes, nearly new. One day a good natured fellow in gray with no shoes to speak of walked along our line looking intently at the shoes of the capital the side of mine and, remarking that I was just his size, added; 'Old Pete [Longstreet] says he will have every man shot who steals anything from a prisoner. To save my life, won't you trade shoes with me? For I must have them shoes.' Of course I traded, as did other prisoners."

At this Longstreet smiled, but insisted that the story didn't prove anything.
