A THRILLING TALE IN FOUR CHAPTERS,

BY JULIUS CHAMBERS.

I.

LINKED TO A TERRIBLE CRIME.

"You'll kill me yet! Was my wife's parting taunt.

It was the end. Rising from my own dinner-table, at which I had been seated prior to this sudden outburst of frenzy, I stepped into the hall drew on my overcoat, and with those bitter words ringing in my ears, stepped into the street.

We had been married ten years, and this was not by any means our only quarrel. Never before had my wife manifested such an intensity of hatred. It was my first awakening to the fact that Anna despised me. As she had glared at me across the table, with her cruel eyes, it would have been hard to tell whether she feared or coveted assassination.

The insinuation was meaningless to me, at the time, for I never had harmed her in the slightest respect. To a stranger however, her vicious language would have indicated that dreadful scenes had preceded this one. In her eyes I saw burning keenly the latent fires of wrath that once enkindled in a woman's heart are never quenched. She thoroughly hated me, for the time, though she might repent her words before the sun rose. But, poor girl, she had been ill for some days, and our family physician, Dr. Stanage, had warned me that her mind was not as strong as when I had first known and loved her. Such was the apology I made for her.

And still I was a very unhappy man, as I slowly made my way toward the Juniper club. When I reached the door of the club-house my face had such a worn expression that the old porter departed from his customary frigid civility far enough to say,—

"I beg pardon, Mr. Jasper, are you ill?"

Glancing at the mirror across the hall, I was myself startled by the wild visage I there saw reflected. I was indeed ill, —heart-sick.

I tried to avoid my friends that evening as much as possible. I went into the supper-room and drank a cup of black coffee. I next lit a cigar and strolled into the library. Nothing there to divert my mind. Seeking the card-room I found a vacant place at a poker-table. For four hours I played mechanically, without sense or skill, and with varying fortune. The stakes were not high, and my recklessness saved me from heavy loss. At midnight I quit the game slightly behind.

The recollection of my domestic unhappiness did not leave me for an instant.

Descending to the smoking-room, I found a vacant chair at one of the windows, and throwing myself into it, I gazed out upon the avenue. Lonely as was the thoroughfare, it seemed merry with conviviality when I studied my own heart. A 'bus-driver passed up-town on his last trip. Ah! he was going home, —a place I no longer possessed How I envied him!

I rose to leave the building: I would go to a hotel to pass the night.

At the door, likewise taking his departure, I met Harris, a near neighbor. We lived in Thirty-Seventh Street, in the same block, just out of Fifth Avenue.

"Well, Jasper, going home?" he asked.

"Yes," I answered, mechanically, though I intended to say "No." It was not an act of aphasia, this. I had become such a creature of irresolution that in the brief interval between the question and the reply I had resolved to return home and make peace.

We walked slowly up-town, my neighbor and I. What we talked about I cannot recall, because my mind was fully occupied with my own thoughts,—my overmastering sorrow. We separated at my door, and, as we did so, the clock in the great brick church at the corner of the avenue struck the hour.

"One o'clock!" exclaimed Harris. "I hadn't any idea it was so late." Then we said good-by.

There stood my home, in all its darkness,—its family skeleton shrouded like the dead of night. Everybody was in bed.

I had not decided on a course of procedure that would insure the restoration of my happiness. Something of the kind was imperative. I stepped into my library and dropped into an arm-chair before the dying embers in the grate. It was the very place for such deliberation.

We had quarrelled, Anna and I, about a very commonplace matter, as I have said, There was no limit, however' to her indignation. Doubtless, on some forgotten occasion, or in some unrecognized way I had provoked her. It was the part of manhood to assume the blame, anyhow. I'd do it. For the sake of our home and our daughter, I would not leave her alone, even for one night. I had loved Anna very deeply, and nothing but her recent uncontrollable outbursts of temper had estranged me. Why should it alter my affection,—especially as she was sick and physically distressed?

This apologetic line of reasoning quieted my mind for the time, and I absolutely ceased to think. Perhaps I dozed for a few minutes. When I resumed my self-communing, I was rather surprised to find that my argument had taken an antithecal turn. The provocation was certainly hers. She was very unreasonable. Why should I humiliate myself by the further sacrifice of self-respect? Though this line of thought was repugnant to my better impulses, I could not divert my mind into a channel that accorded with them. Several times, to my surprise, I detected myself speaking aloud, and with bitterness.

After a little time, my manhood reasserted itself; my duty as a husband and as a father became clear, respite all conflicting impulses, and I decided to restore the harmony of our household.

I sat very still, watching the fire burn out, as had my happiness.

I must have fallen into a troubled sleep, for when I again looked into the grate its coals were dull, the room was chilly, and a ray of moonlight that had not been there earlier entered from the window, crossing the heavy Persian rug at my feet.

I shivered. I was conscious of a feeling that something had happened in the house while I had slept. Stepping to the window and getting in the sheen, I looked at my watch.

It was almost three o'clock: I had been home two hours!

I quietly ascended the stairs to my room,—our room. It was a large apartment at the front, just over the drawing-room.

I opened the door cautiously. Within was darkness, except for the moonlight that streamed through one of the windows across the bed. The bed was empty, and undisturbed! Had Anna fled? No. How stupid I! she had doubtless gone to some other room to sleep.

I called her name in a low voice, once —and, again, louder.

No answer.

I found a match in my clothes, struck a light, and discovered my wife lying, dressed in a white wrapper, on a sofa in the centre of the room.

How pretty she was! What should I do? Was she sleeping, or shamming? Asleep, of course. The storm had passed, she was calm now: the gently-parted lips told me, without moving, that she was penitent and longed for forgiveness. I wouldn't wait for her to ask. I'd sit down beside her on the couch, and waken her with a kiss. I'd rehearse the nursery-tale of the Prince and the Sleeping Beauty. Dear heart, the old love should be ours again.

I approached on tiptoe, having still some doubts as the way in which my offer of affection would be received. Would she resent my caress? Heaven only knew.

I knelt by her side on the edge of the wide sofa, and, bending slowly over her, pressed my lips to hers. Oh, God!

I sprang to my feet. The mouth was damp with the nameless moisture of death,—the ooze of the tomb. I clutched her wrist—no pulse. I placed my hand upon her heart—no throb. I tried to raise her to a sitting posture, but her limp form escaped from my trembling grasp and fell in a heap upon the floor. The eyelids slowly opened, revealing the cold gray orbs, now stony in their stare.

Dead!

Remorse-stricken, that Anna had died before forgiving me, I sank to a kneeling posture before the corpse. I was utterly incapable of reasoning, or of comprehending the awful calamity that had come upon our household.

How had such a fate overtaken her? Could it be that she had killed herself? Surely that was preposterous.

Staggering to the light, I turned it higher, and saw on my shirt-cuff a great bright-red blotch, like a peony. Her blood! Looking more closely now, I saw a similar spot on her bosom.

Murder! My poor Anna murdered!

Again and again, in the anguish of my woe, did I clasp her limp corpse to my breast. Next seeing the blood-spot on her white dress, I tore it open, and found just over the heart, a wound—not half an inch long, but deep as a stab from a sword-cane. Oh, whose work, this? I had loved the lost one, after all. As I lay there by her side upon the floor, I recalled the gentleness of her youth, when our love was young——

Was I mistaken, or didn't the hall door, that I had shut, open slightly and as silently close?

I sprang to it and flung it wide.

Silence: darkness.

A dozen different lines of thought ran through my mind simultaneously. And yet my will to shout for the police and to alarm the inmates of the house would not assert itself.

A Rage For Jewellery.

There is more jewellery worn at the present time than for years. If you will take notice in your travels every woman you see will have as many rings on one finger as she can afford. There was a time when a woman of taste would not wear more than one ring on one finger. That has been changed.

You will frequently see a finger with three or four rings upon it. Rings for gifts are the thing now. And the gift of one does not indicate now as it used to. There was a time when to give a lady a ring meant that the lover had proposed and had been accepted, not that he intended to propose.

It is not so now. Women nowadays wear rings who have no idea of marrying, and women wear them who are married. There is a ring called the friendship ring. It has no special shape. It is called so because it signifies friendship and nothing more.

How to Wash Flannels.

Here are seven rules for the proper washing of flannels:

1. Use warm water in which sufficient soap has been dissolved.
2. Wash thoroughly in this.
3. Rinse in clear, warm water twice.
4. Wring out and shake well to clear off all soap.
5. Dry quickly.
6. Do not let the flannels remain in the water either before or after washing.
7. Do not use soda or any washing powder.

There is nothing that vexes the soul of the careful mother of a household more than the weekly shrinkage in flannels. Unless carefully washed they are a most expensive summer luxury, and yet there is no pleasanter sight to her partial eyes than her handsome lads in all the glory of their fresh white flannels. With good management a suit of clothes may last a long time before reaching the inevitable scanty stage.

The use of calomel for derangements of the liver has ruined many a fine constitution. Those who, for similar troubles, have tried Ayer's Pills testify to their efficacy in thoroughly remedying the malady, without injury to the system.

Hugh Munro, of Portuguese Cove, went to Ketch Harbor last evening to bring his wife from church. Some boys got in his team, where it was standing; the horse ran away, and James Mackie, aged 7 (son of Samuel) had his leg caught in the spokes of the wheel, and the leg twisted off from the knee-cap down. The lad is a brother-in-law of C. W. Gray, undertaker. The part of the leg was found on the road, some distance behind. Drs. Gow and Black were telephoned for, and cut off the leg above the knee. The little fellow will hardly survive.—Acadian Recorder.

Like Othello, the Chinaman's occupation's gone; no use for Ling Sing now. You can do your own washing and take a delight in it. You can wash and clean and scour, and the whole process will be a joy to you. "Lessive Phenix" does it. It is a washing solutive, but it has no relation to the wretched washing powders which make your clothes yellow and your hands hard; "Lessive Phenix" saves time, labor and soap. No more soda. No more ashes. Try it with flannels. Try it with cottons. Try it with your tin and brass and silverware. This is the astonishing fact. The greatest boom in the wash that has ever been introduced. And yet it will clean and scour and brighten anything in the house. Ask your grocer.

THE McGREEVY MATTER.

evidence that he took the responsibility without reference to the minister—although the statement was subsequently modified by saying it was probable his report was discussed with the minister." The minority observe that Sir Hector swore he was not so consulted. The minority however, think Sir Hector acted improperly in permitting payments to be made,

As to the first direct charge of corrupt practice against the minister of public works the minority find that a member of the firm paid or caused to be paid him large sums of money.

The majority point out that the only evidence that such payments were made is that of Murphy, who says he gave the minister $10,000 in 1887.

After noting Murphy's evidence and showing that he forgot the date, place and manner, and that he was contradicted by Sir Hector Langevin, on oath, as well as by Connolly, Laforce Langevin, Martin Connolly and others (while he way not supported by his own books of account) the majority give certain facts in Murphy's history by way of throwing light on his credibility.

It is however shown that Robt. McGreevy supported Murphy's statement though not from his own knowledge. The committee point out that Robert in his evidence admitted that he had taken a false affidavit and that he had personal reasons for attacking his brother and the minister. The majority "therefore report that the accusation of personal corruption made in this charge has not been sustained, but has been disproved."

The minority say that they "are unable, after much doubt, to come to the conclusion that we would be justified in finding that charge proved."

concludes as follows: "The committee have the following general observations to make on the charge generally." Having regard to various features which appear in the contracts which were the subject of this investigation, we feel bound to report that the members of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co. conspired to defraud the government and the harbor commissioners, and were materially aided in their designs by the interference of Thomas McGreevy, as has been shown in earlier parts of this report. This conspiracy has been all the more powerful and effective by reason of the confidence which the late minister of public works had in the integrity and efficiency of his officers and by reason of the confidence which the late minister entertained with regard to Thomas McGreevy, and has accomplished results which are to be greatly regretted as regards the administration of the department and greatly to be condemned as regards those who lent themselves knowingly to the purposes of the conspirators.

The charges against Sir Hector Langevin as already intimated, having been as above set forth. The committee would observe that in course of the investigation an effort was made to connect him with the wrong doing of others who have been reported against as directly connected with fradulent conduct. The committee therefore report that the evidence does not justify them in concluding that the minister knew of the conspiracy before mentioned or that he willingly lent himself to its objects.

The committee recommend in addition to such action as may seem to be called for under the findings hereinbefore expressed, such legal proceeding as may be available be taken against those who are concerned in this conspiracy, and that for that purpose the books and papers which were before the committee be retained(or so many of them as may be necessary) in order that they may be available for such proceedings."

The minority say, "In concluding their report, your committee would observe that the manner in which the several contracts were obtained by Larkin, Connolly & Co. from the public works department and the Quebec harbor commissioners, the modifications subsequently made in these contracts in the interests of the firm, the enormous sums of money paid and allowed to them out of the public funds for extras, and for damages, indicate without any reasonable doubt that this firm had gained a controlling influence over the minister and department of public works. That influence we believe to have been largely exercised through Thomas McGreevy.

"It was suggested that the frauds might have been perpetrated upon the department through improper influence used upon Messrs Perley and Boyd, the engineers, but the closest examination of the books and the witnesses failed to disclose evidence of any improper payments having been made to Mr. Boyd, while the only one made to Mr. Perley was that in 1887 of the jewelry and diamonds; a time long after many of these contracts had been improperly paid. Except the desire to please and obey the minister at the head of the department, we cannot discover any motives which would induce these engineers to assist in defrauding the public in order to put money in the pockets of Larkin, Connolly & Co. It is true, we find that Mr. Boyd was a party to the fraud connected with the awarding of the cross wall contract, and that Mr. Perley was a party to this and other frauds in the letting of the contracts and the payment of the moneys to Larkin, Connolly & Co., but the fruits of these frauds did not go into their pockets, but into the pockets of Thos. McGreevy, towards the support of the newspaper Le Monde, to which Sir Hector swore he himself financially contributed so that he might have a controlling influence over it if and when required, and to the fund managed by Thos. McGreevy on behalf of the party in the district of Quebec in the political interest of Sir Hector Langevin."

It may be observed that the minority accept Murphy's evidence as gospel truth, except in one instance, though they go out of their way to throw discredit on the testimony of the Connollys. They accept the evidence of Williams, who was mentioned as a possible successor to Murphy, though Sir Hector Langevin, Mr. Perley and Thos. McGreevy all swore that his appointment would be entirely out of the question. The evidence of these latter men is not even mentioned.

At the old "Squire Burleigh place," so called, in Palermo, is a chestnut tree that is said to be the largest tree between the Kennebec and Penobscot rivers. Five feet from the ground its circumference is 17 feet and five inches. The tree was set out during her stay there and when she came to leave, it was found too large to take away.
