

AS ONCE A GREEK MADDEN.

As once a Greek maddened wove
The golden thread that turned to silver,
To which he gave his soul, he lost his life,
But never had studied woman's brow.
Nor knew what magic lies the heart,
Or who the soul of nature's charms till now.
Helen he loves, to whom we owe

His hand had pictured many a rose,

And sketched the rays that light the brook;

With white and blue, or what else chose,
A grecian's brow, the greatest has bowed.

"Oh ! if such magic power there be,

This—this," he cried, "is all my prayer,

To gain that living light I see,

And fix the soul that sparkles there."

His power, as soon as breathed, was born,

His pulse, touched by Love, grew warm,

And pointing her hue hummed,

From lifeless flowers to woman's form.

Such was the power of Helen's love,

And there was now a life, a soul,

Where only colour glowed before.

These first sensations learned to move,

And Helen's life was born to move,

While smiling on the maiden's cheek,

Young souls kindled into thought,

Then harkened where darkened eyes

Upon the looks of beauty threw ;

And Helen's eyes were born to move,

Held to Love, to whom we owe

All that's fair and bright below,

Song was cold and Painting dim,

Till Song and Painting learned from him.
