The royal feast was done; the king Sought some new sport to banish care And to his jester cried: "Sir Fool, Kneel now, and make for a prayer!" The jester doffed his cap and bells And stood the mocking court before They could not see the bitter smile Behind the painted grin he wore.

"No pity, Lord, could change the heart From red with wrong to white as wool The rod must heal the sin; but Lord Be merciful to me, a fool!"

"Tis not by guilt the onward sweep Of truth and right, O Lord we stay,; "Tis by our follies that so long We hold the earth from heaven away. "These clumsy feet, still in the mire, Go crushing blossoms without end; These hard, well-meaning hands we thrus Among the heart-strings of a friend.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept— Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung! The word we had not sense to say— Who knows how grandly it had rung! "Our faults no tenderness should ask, The chastening stripes must cleanse the all: But for our blunders—oh, in shame Before the eyes of heaven we fall. "Earth bears no balsam for mistakes Men crown the knave and scourge ti That did his will; but thou, O Lord, Be mereful to me, a fool!"

The room was hushed; in silence rose
The king, and sought his gardens cool,
And walked apart, and nurmured low,
"Be merciful to me, a fool!"

But in auld Scotia

All can remember the thrill of pain that ran through every Scottish heart when the news came of that fatal pistol shot of March 25, in Paris, whose echo startled a world. Hector Macdonald's unique career had endeared him to all our hearts. His untimely death was regarded as little less than a national disaster. He was a son of the soil, a "ranker" who had risen to a commanding position in the British army. Without friends or influence this ranker, by sheer grit and ability, had held his own with the bluest of Britain, and those who were born with the pro-verbial silver spoon in their mouths could

With pride we can point to his work in Egypt which transformed the downtrodden and dispirited Egyptians into the bravest and best disciplined soldiers in the world. We know that MacDonald a British colony in defiance of every law had abused his position and discussed the was the hero of Omdurman and he alone saved the day though Kitchener was norminally in chief command.

Our gallant war correspondents made that an open secret. Yet Lord Kitchener received a reward of £30,000 while the real winner of the battle was in London without a expence in his pocket. When some parties wanted to oppose the grant in parliament unless something was done for MacDonald, he, himself, asked them to refrain, saying his friends did not know the harm they were showering on him.

When the Highland Brigade was demorated at Magersfontein, Hector MacDonald was brought from India and by his energy and the brigade's confidence in him, shook them together, and made them men fit again to dare and do.
