My dear King:

An American Literary Encyclopaedia is including a new edition, an account of a few distinguished Canadians and they have asked me to furnish about two thousand words on Sir Wilfrid Laurier. What they want especially is a few extracts from his most striking speeches. I daresay that you have made up your mind as to such passages and if you would give me a suggestion as to what they are I should be extremely grateful. I suppose the speech on the death of Sir John Macdonald is one of the best but I wonder if you so regard it. If you have any chapter in your proposed book on the subject and would let me see it I should take great care of it and return it promptly.

Yours sincerely
