CHRIST.-Mark viii.

Ver. 35.—This is a paradoxical way of speaking, the word life being used in a higher and a lower sense. When a word is so used, a man may correctly be said to lose that which he keeps and to keep or find that which he loses: Whosoever shall be unduly anxious about the lower life shall lose the higher, and thus in due time both; but whosoever will sacrifice the lower life to the interests of the higher for Christ's sake shall gain

Ver. 36. 37.—It should be noted that although the Revised Version substitutes the word life for soul in these passages, it, nevertheless, retains soul in the margin; and the importance of the teaching is not affected by the change. The question, whichever form of it we take, is one of the most stupendous which could be proposed; and would fall upon goat in that respect. the ear with overwhelming torce, but for that familiarity with Divine truth which makes the most stirring declarations of Holy Writ seem commonplace. The words are few, the things spoken of are familiar enough; but the views opened up are vast as the world and the soul; the gain of one and the loss of the other. The world is material; the soul is spirit. ual. The history of creation shows the essential difference and the superiority of the soul. The word is transitory; the soul immortal. Everything we gain in connection with the world is short-lived; but the soul is not only immortal in itself, but an to it during our life here. Man has only an external and temporary relation to the world; but the soul is himself .- it constitutes self, the seat of our intelligence, of our consciousness, of our responsibility to God. No outward circumstance of worldly gain can possibly compare in importance with the well-being of the soul. The gain of the world involves anxiety and toil, which are never repaid by that which is gained—it is in itself a disappointing thing. To lose the soul is to lose all that is valuable to an intelligent moral beingvirtue, happiness, hope, éternal lifeit is to be involved in utter, irretrievable and eternal ruin. To aim at gaining the world is to place the soul in peril of being lost. This is the unquestionable point to which the passage leads. The question would be pointless if men were not in danger of losing their souls through eagerness to gain the world. All human experience proves that this danger exists. Yet men will not believe it, and thus fall into it continually. Very few, indeed, deliberately sacrifice their souls for the gain of the world; but numbers do so thoughtlessly. 2. The answer to the question. It can only be that a man is profited nothing. This is a profit and loss account in which every thing you could possibly put down on the profit side is infinitely counterbalanced by the one entry-the loss of the soul. Even if the gain of the world possessed any intrinsic value during the brief period it can be enjoyed, this would be true; but, the tact is, it false and delusive. For every item | barns, etc. of supposed profit you have to write an involved loss which outweighs the profit. To attend to the soul's salvation is the first business of life. If men would pay half the attention to their soul's interest which they pay to worldly things, the danger would be avoided. The sou! may be saved because it is redeemed. The greatest aggravation of the guilt of losing the soul is that Christ died to save it .-Abridged from Sunday-school Maga-

1. Look at the contrast suggested—

HANDLING HORSES.

Men differ greatly in the amount frequently far different from that of | in fine stock are swindlers. the hired man. We have seen teams kept poor in flesh by an almost incessant worry from an ill-fitting harness, an inhuman jerking upon the bits, or a frequent and injudicious use of the whip. Boys are not exempt from these strictures. Many teams have had their usefulness impaired by a disregard of the feelings of the horses. It is not the well-fed horse only that does the most work and keeps in the best condition; he must also have a kind master, and be sensibility.—Agriculturist.

Now, chemwal and grape sugars are called pure. Special grades are made for manufacturers. The public, after more than a dozen years use of chemical sugar, call for tonics, mineral waters (a curative for chemical ills) and the sexton; while the plain old question is again and again repeated, Are not the sugars poisoned?

Laws of Life is in favor of invalids, or for that matter, well people, sleeping in about the same temperature that they live in during the day. It thinks that persons confined largely in the house during the day make a mistake in sleeping in rooms absolutely cold at night.

Vanilla extract can be made easily. To half a pint of alcohol allow two vanilla beans; cut them in very small bits, put them in a bottle, and pour the spirits over them. If possible have a bottle with a glass stopper. In two weeks the extract will be ready for use, and will be very satisfactory as well as inexpensive.

Says a New England exchange: 'The best soil for sugar beets is a deep, sandy loam. The subsoil should be permeable, or otherwise made so, by underdraining. The land would be much improved if deeply plowed in the fall, after a good coating of green manure had been spread upon it; eighteen inches would be none too deep to plow it. For the spring it should be shallower.

Prof. Kedzie, of the Agricultural College of Michigan, an expert chemist, recently said that a paint or wash made of skim milk, thoroughly skimmed, and water brine will render wood unit flammable, and he proved it by experiment. He said this paint or whitewash, is durable, very cheap, impervious to water, of agreeable color, and as it will prevent wood does not give what it promises even from taking fire, he urged its use for the time. > In building a chimney put a quantity of salt into the mortar with which the inter-courses of brick are to be laid. The effect will be that there will never be any accumulation of soot in the chimney. The philosophy is thus stated: The salt in the portion of mortar which is exposed, absorbs moisture from the atmosphere every damp day. The soot thus becomes damp, falls down the fireplace.
