CANNIBAL ISLAND NOTES We had a fine time (jolly crowd). Did any one see Mr Burchell ! Who did the screaming ! I didn't.

There's nothing like taking comfort. sk Mr Kearney. Who said Ogdersburg Bill looked raing in a wyandotte yellow? We wouldn't wear it. That rain was wet; so was my bed, said "Dick."

Which one of the cha neart failure in the night? Too hadwhat was the cause of it all ? Dick says the house is haunted and Jim, with Ernie, swears to it.

Delta isn't too slow. One of our bunch has learned the art of making hats (Terrible odious,)

Did anyone see our cat? Who drop ped it in the pan while Jim and Flossie peeled potatoes? Who talks about him in her sleep?

Florence brought the cat, but who brought the cur?—I mean Ethel.

Where did Jennie get those chickens of such tender years? Who lost a tooth in the fray? Where did the candy come from ? Last, but nct least, here's to the jolliest man in the bunch, Mr Halladay. Who likes him? We all do. -GRAND FINALE-We all want to come again. Who was it that kept the boys wake at night with the noise? Was Everybody works but Flossie, And Ernie runs around all night, While Florence with eyes like teacup Looks out on the morning light. Effie gets very homesick, Everybody eats but Wesley, While Kearney's full of fear.

Nobody works but mudder, While Louisa she takes fright, Effic talks in her sleep, Kearney is ready to fight. While Jennie keeps in sight-Three cheers for good old Delta, For we must say good night.

REGRET THEIR DEPARTURE

MRS. (REV) R. L. EDWARDS HONORED AT BALTIMORE (Cobourg World)

At a recent meeting of the Balti-timore W.M.S. Auxiliary Mrs (Rev) R. L. Edwards was presented with a farewell address by the society, which ex essed esteem for her and regret at her removal. Tue address was accompanied by a solid oak rocker, elegantly carved, which was presented by Mr J. W. Roweliffe. Mrs Edwardswas complete ly taken by surprise and overcome by emotion, Rev R. L. Edwards replied to the ladies on her behalf.

Another surprise awaited her at the parsonage the same eyening when her Sabbath School class assembled and presented her with a beautiful large jardiniere and stand. The presentation was made by Misses Mabel Ball and Gertrude Frazer, while Miss Jennie Fraser read a farewell address from the class. To this Mrs Edwards made suitable reply.

But the W.M.S. and the Sabbath meeting and Ladies' Aid alike will miss har t chful and efficient services. She will be also missed in social circles where her gentle grace of manner, unfailing charity of speech and quiet humor made her a general favorite.

Rev R. L. Edwards preached his farewell sermon last Sunday morning from the text, "He that endureth unto the end shall be saved. Be thou faith.

It will give weak women many valuable suggesting of relief—and with ful unto death and I will give thee a strictly confidential medical advice is crown of life." Throughout his entire pastorate Mr Edwards has proven him self a good preacher, a faithful pastor, and a christian gentleman excelled by how these soothing, healing, antiseptic

"VITA OPPIDE"

Under this title, dear Editor, there is much more to say than shall be said. Perhaps there have been certain times Perhaps there have been certain times when things have appeared to you in a clearer light than usual; when lines have shown prominently and clear-cut where it is their wont to be blurred and dimmed. At such times, doubt less, your mind has photographed the ommonplace, the "vita oppide," tornstance; and when the mental film has been developed you may have been surprised to see, not mere hamlet folk, but creatures of high destinies. There fore, we ask you to search this story:—
It is the time of labor for the farm ers (not was, for this story gathers no enchantment from the distance). It is now that each hardy son of Toil goes with his pitchfork to the conquest of the timothy field. He seems not to mind the callous piling thick upon his Don't think it a fish story when I hands nor the beads of sweat that make say we caught fish in a pan, while his ruddy face shine where the purple standing on the shore (thanks to our shadows fall from his great straw hat. We do not know why he does not mind these, but we think he is pleased with visions of bursting barns, pulpy silos, and rich stores of provis silos, and rich stores of provisions for the winter. We have noticed him at work on the nearby hillside with a scorobing sun above him; he has been there since Dawn ushered in the day; he will not leave there until Night has walked silently through his fields. Therefore is this rustic man bound to his work by the chains of necessity, habit, perhaps desire. At meal time he is a happy man, and justly so. The steaming dish is pleasant to his sight, and he par:akes of it often, sadly, with too little restraint. We feel, however, that we can forgive him an overindul gence more freely than another man ecause he has our highest respect in that he is one in the vast train of men who are continually laboring for us. who seem, for that reason, to enjoy but slight liberty. This farmer is a fighter: the hayfield is his battle ground; the pitchfork is his weapon, and his conquest is the brimming harvest. Meditate thoughtfully upon this man, for despite his roughness he seems to us to contain something of It is Sunday morning now and the the only movement on the empty street is the quivering of the leaves along its sides. The church tower rears its grey it the "Blue Cranes ?" No, it was the stones up where the morning sun can strike it. The stillness is broken by the church bell. It begins to rock and soon its metallic notes chime ou over the village. Now, nen and women are moving slowly along towards the church. Some of them are interesting individuals; others are less interesting. It is we'll nigh time for the service to commence; the buggies and spring wagons have brought their owners to town; to day the hay field is vacant. The clergymen with their wives hurry along the way these clergymrn who point the morals of men—we feel a certain awe when we read upon their faces their purpose they are awful to us, these men and women who fashion public thought. When the service commenced there were some clouds in the west; those substantial discount the balance of his clouds are now lying flat upon the eastern horizon and the church vomits out her men. The tall, rough boned farmer drives homeward, thinking perhaps of to morrow's conquest-per haps of something else. The delicate young lady turns over in her mind certain important questions relating to costume and appearance. The preach er, as he emerges from the holy edifice, looks up at the clouds and as he walks homewards wonders how many opinions he has, this day, remodeled. Thus, dear Editor, for an indefinite length of time, we might chronicle such commonplace facts as these. They are to be seen by the human eye, to be determined by a physical sense. But mind that you do not underrate these items of your own "vita oppide," for in mentioning them we feel that we have touched those things from which evolves the most considerable of all designs.
