HEAD OR TAIL?

The following sound sense from the Toronto Star may well be pondered over by every young man:

When a young man plays his first game of cards for money or bets on a horse race he is, generally speaking, lucky if he loses and unlucky if he wins. His first experience makes a deeper impression on him than he is aware of. If he wins on his first venture it takes a lot of subsequent losses to teach him that he is playing with fire. If he loses at first, he needs the caution.

The man who does not gamble, or bet, or speculate, is often moved with envy as he learns of the easy gains his acquaintances have made while he is adding two and two together in his office. But if he has not their gains, he has not their losses, nor is his mind distracted as theirs must constantly be. He is building a business that will maintain him permanently; they are trying to pull fortunes out of the passing winds.

While the minds of young men are filled with stories of sudden gains acquired by betting and stock dealing, it is worth while to call their attention to the two buffys. One of them is a successful business man in a Pennsylvania town; the other was yesterday sent to the Central Prison for six months. One stuck to business; the other followed the races, expecting, no doubt, to learn all about the horses and make big money. He was arrested on a charge of pocket-picking and wrote his brother for funds. "I am sending the money," wrote the brother, "but where are your race track friends of whom you think so much?" Where have such friends always been in similar cases from the days of the prodigal son until yesterday? Young fellows will not listen to sermonizing on this question, but they should not miss the significance of incidents that happen within their own knowledge, showing that many get dashed to pieces trying to jump chasms to sudden wealth.

THE QUICK AND THE DEAD.

Woodstock Express.

The Americans spend one day in the year deprecating the graves of their dead heroes with flowers, and the other 364 days decorating the fame of their living heroes with mud.

THEY WILL BE BETTER OFF.

Providence Journal.

When the wounds of the conflict in South Africa are healed the advantages of the outcome will doubtless be more clearly perceived, even by the Boers themselves. They will be more prosperous and better governed under the British flag.

IT ISN'T FAIR.

Life.

If a man is killed by an automobile, his estate may collect damages to no greater amount than $5,000. If he is merely maimed, there is no limit to the damages. This is manifestly unjust, being class legislation in favor of the comparatively few chauffeurs who have perfect control of their machines, and can always be sure of killing their man.

A DOSE OF HIS OWN MEDICINE.

Toronto Telegram.

Hon G. W. Ross has not been able to comply with the terms of his own referendum. The Ontario prohibitionists were told that they could not carry out their ideas unless they could poll a majority of all the votes cast at this election. The Liberal politicians propose to carry out their ideas after they have failed to get a majority of the votes polled at this election. The Ontario government has failed to poll that proportion of the total vote which it demanded from prohibitionists.

Anecdotal.

As a preface to his attack upon the recent army appointments in England, Rudyard Kipling tells a story of a man who was carrying a bag, and of whom a fellow-traveler asked what it was that he had contained. "Mongoose," was the answer; "my brother sees snakes, and I'm taking the mongooses up to kill them." "But your brother doesn't see real snakes," "No; but these aren't real mongooses."

Hans Jensen, a Dane, who appeared before a Kansas judge in order to take out naturalization papers, very easily demonstrated his fitness for the privilege. "Hans," said the judge, "are you satisfied with the general conditions of the country? Does this government suit you?" "Yas, yas," replied the Dane, "only I would like to see more 'Swear him!' exclaimed the judge. "I see that he already has the Kansas idea."

On one occasion Hans Richter was present at a concert given by a brother composer, at which the latter performed a long and not particularly interesting work of his own. When the composition came to an end Richter expressed his criticism in a very forthright manner. "I think I might have written compositions to make a pile so high," raising his hand three feet from the ground; "but I had burned them!"

A story is being told in the London clubs about King Edward. A discussion once arose among a circle of his intimate friends as to how they would each meet a sudden reverse of fortune. One of them turned to the Prince of Wales and said: "If the monarchy was overthrown here, sir, what would you do?" The Prince of Wales thought for a moment, and then replied: "I would like to see my family by lecturing in the United States upon how it feels to be Prince of Wales."

When Mark Twain lived in Buffalo he made the acquaintance of some neighbors under peculiar circumstances. Emerging from his house one morning, he saw something which made him run across the street, and remark to the people who were standing on the sidewalk: "My name is Clemens; my wife and I have been intending to call on you and make your acquaintance. We owe you an apology for not doing it before now. I beg your pardon for intruding on you in this informal manner, and at this time of day, but your house is on fire!"

While Charles A. Towne was senator from Minnesota for about thirty days last winter he made a speech on the Philippines in the Senate Chamber of Congress, and it was pronounced a great effort. At the conclusion of his speech, Senator Chauncey Depew was among the first to take Mr. Towne by the hand and congratulate him. "Senator Towne," he is said to have remarked, "your delivery was splendid, your rhetoric unsurpassed, but your argument was damnable." This left-handed compliment was no doubt intended to embarrass Senator Towne, but it didn't. He bowed politely to Mr. Depew, and said: "Senator Depew, I am glad you compliment the only features of my speech you are capable of understanding."

Nebuchadnezzar's Throne Room.

(Berlin correspondence of the London "News.")

The German Oriental Society confirms the reports in American papers to the effect that Dr. Koldewey has succeeded in discovering Nebuchadnezzar's throne room at Babylon. It is a gigantic building, about 60 feet high, 160 feet long. Exactly opposite the door is the niche in which once the royal throne stood, and on both sides and on the northern front of the hall are richly carved ornaments, in good preservation, which will doubtless prove of the highest historical and artistic importance. The German expedition has also begun excavations in the City of Babylon, near the present village of Jumjuma, and has already discovered a goodly number of inscribed clay tablets, which, according to the testimony of Dr. Weisbach, the Assyriologist of the expedition, contain letters, psalms and vocabularies. They are, therefore, all documents of the deepest interest, and are especially calculated to further the study of the Old Testament.

With the help of new railway material, the work on the hill of Amran, in the city of Amman, is being resumed, and the excavations of this unique Pantheon of the Babylonian metropolis, hidden deep down in the earth, promise rich and varied discoveries. The German Oriental Society does not confine its activity to Babylon. It has secured two other hills, named Fara and Abu Hatab, which are believed to contain the most important monuments dating from 4000 B.C. The two hills are not far from Nuffar, where the American excavations are being made, and the Sultan has already issued an irade permitting the excavations.

The Playgoer's Dinner.

A correspondent who signs himself "Serious Playgoer" writes to the "Illustrated London News": "Is it not possible to induce the public to moderate its eating and drinking before going to the play? If you have eaten a very large meal, how can you be in the mood for real drama? Nowadays the playwright has to provide, not drama, but an aid to digestion, a kind of dramatic equivalent to the cigarette and liqueur. He may count himself happy if rows of gentlemen in white waistcoats are gently stimulated by a theatrical anecdote, set to music if possible, and enlivened by charming costumes. If his characters have any troubles, these must be comic embarrassments, not the sort of troubles that create even a white waistcoat in actual life. I see the necessity for this entertainment so long as the playgoer has no scruple about the dining. Max Beerbohm, who treats this subject with admirable philosophy, proposes that the theater shall open in the early morning. Let us take our drama, he says, after breakfast, when the mind has a dewy freshness. Let commerce and its tolls be put off until the evening. This, I fear, is a poetic ideal, like asking the moon to shine in the morning and the sun to oblige about nine p.m. It is upon the playgoer's dinner that reformers must concentrate their energies."
