DOES NOT BUDGE ON ESSENTIAL SUBJECTS

But Memory is Not So Good on Non-Essentials

Edmonton, Alta., May 25 .- All afteroon Mr. Biggar, counsel for Attorney General Cross, and P. J. Nolan, counsel for Premier Rutherford, have striven to shake the startling testimony given this morning by Hon. W. H. Cushing, ex-minister of public works, that the date of the letter written by him to Premier Rutherford on September 14 1909, objecting to the A. & G. specifications, was surreptitiously changed. They failed. The exminister could not be budged. His memory regarding the incident was perfectly clear, and he told his story in a plain, straightforward manner that carried conviction.

Upon E. Trowbridge, former private secretary to Cushing, will fall most of the trouble of explaining it, and it will be interesting to see how he does The combined acumen of Biggar

There was a clash this afternoon between Bennett and Biggar when the latter started to cross-examine the witness in regard to private matters. "Following the election in March, 1909, you went to Detroit, did you not?"

"Did you not obtain a large sum said substantially that. naturally doing the best he could to defend the government, and I was do-ing the reverse." returned Bennett.

Mr. Cushing explained that in the speech he only spoke of the railroad contracts in a general way. He also said that before the campaign he had gone to the premier's house and pointed out to him the loose features of a civic building costing over half a million lying idle-for the lack of funds to complete it.

The result was that the city hall byhalf passed by a tremendous majority that was an entirely different thing from a record vote, the basis of approval being 7 to 1 for the completion of the said he had told Cross before the meeting that the waddell specifications. tions were not the same as those pre-
