The danger therefore from kerosene of kerosene oil, or nearly all, the oil which evaporates at a low temperature and thus becomes explosive, has been removed. This latter oil is naptha or benzine. So long as this is kept confined, so that its vapor cannot mix with the common air, it is safe. But the moment the gas mixes with the atmosphere it becomes explosive and dangerous. These facts give the reason why it is never safe, under any circumstances, to fill a lighted lamp, or to pour kerosene from a can upon a species, can be reduced to a few simple
