

fully exhibited, it will be seen that, in the course which they have pursued, the Free Synod have acted the part which became them as honest men and faithful guardians of the interests of the truth.

In order, however, that the Record may be an efficient instrument in the accomplishment of the various objects for which it has been started, more earnest means must be employed for securing its circulation. Not only every minister, but every member of the Free Church ought to lend his aid that it may be more extensively known, and that it may be found at length occupying its proper place in, at least, all the families of all our congregations.
