SITUATION IN WALL STREET
Likely Effect of President McKinley's Death on Stocks.

Event Has Already Been Largely Discouraged—Exchange Nearly Closed on Saturday—Better Statement Than Had Been Expected—News and Gossip.

World Office, Saturday Evening, Sept. 14.
Out of respect to the memory of the dead President of the United States, the stock and grain and cotton exchanges were today closed all over the world.

As to the effect of President McKinley's death on the stock markets, it is pointed out that the worst has happened in a market that is over the dead of an event in which there was the realization thereof, and that may be the case in this instance.

Moreover, the disaster did not come suddenly, but the banks had a good week to-day. It was a week of steady advance in the stock situation available, and the transactions on that board were encouraging.

As for the general future, it is likely that the accession of a new administration will result in a more liberal policy, and that the event feared has actually happened.

Views of Wall Street after the situation was expressed at the Waldorf after the death of President McKinley was received.

The effect upon the stock market of the death of President McKinley was not less than might have been expected. For less than an hour after the news of the death of McKinley was received, the market was in a state of confusion.
