Carnivals. Feasts. Fairs Give

Rome, Feb. 25.-Rome changes fast; as prosaic as New York's.

The war killed old customs—too many to mention, and peace has failed to do anything except put a stone on their graves. Gone is the old noisy Befana (Epiphany) toy fair, when children got their "Christmas" presents. Romans predict that stockings will actually be hung up by the children if things go on like this.

be hung up by the children if things go on like this.

Carnival Is Gone.

Gone, too, is the carnival, with its races, masques, confetti and noisy mirth. The Feast of St. John on June 24, when every decent citizen ate snails and garlic and sang Roman ditties outside of St. John's Church, is no more. And many other feasts and fairs and customs which delighted citizens as well as tourists, have been swept away.

But Romans, whether Italian or American, no matter where they happened to be born, consoled themselves with the thought that Aragno was left. Aragno is the biggest cafe in this city—the club, debating room and rendezvous where you look for anybody you happen to want. No sane man seeks a long-lost brother on the telephone or by means of the local "Who's Who." He keeps to Aragno—and finds him there.
