GALLI-CURCI IS STAR AS OPERA SEASON OPENS

No Caruso at the Metropolitan for First Time in Fifteen Years.

New York, Nov. 15.—The Metropolitan opera season opened last night and for the first time in fifteen years without Caruso. In the late tenor's stead, Manager Giulio Gatti-Casazza presented the Metropolitan's latest star, Mme. Amalia Galli-Curci, in Verdi's "La Traviata." She was admirably supported by a company that included Mmes. Beret and Egner and Messrs. Gigli, De Luca, Jada, Puccini, Lauricella and Ananias. The famous golden horseshoe presented its customary first night spectacle of 1000 torches and 1000 candles, and the names of the names to be sung in the world of commerce and time.

Every seat in the vast auditorium was filled. Thousands stood in line for hours to secure the cheaper seats.

GREAT BRITAIN AND JAPAN ACCEPT

For absolute secrecy. While this plan, it was pointed out, does not absolutely preclude open negotiations, it was regarded as extremely unlikely that any of the committee meetings would be open or that the public would secure any glimpse of the proceedings except when the delegates in their capacity as committee men have important decisions to report to the conference as a whole.

Washington Nov. 15.—At a conference held yesterday between Premier Brand, head of the French delegation, and Senator Schanzer, president of the Italian delegation, an agreement was reached for a harmonious attitude by the two countries toward questions coming before the conference on limitation of armaments but also those which may come up during the discussion of Pacific and Far Eastern affairs.

China's Position

Washington, Nov. 15.—China's delegation to the Washington conference will present proposals looking to the settlement of Far Eastern problems so far as China is concerned, based on the following general principles: so Dr. Wellington Koo, ambassador to Great Britain and member of the delegation, said yesterday.

On the rehabilitation of China depends the future of the Far East. China must be enabled to work out its economic salvation through the development of the country's immense natural resources.

China's proposals had not been framed yet, Dr. Koo said, but will await the meeting of the conference to take up the Far Eastern situation. China had no intention, he continued, of being inoperative in its plan and would limit proposals to what it believed could be accomplished.

BONAR LAW AND IRISH QUESTION

Suggested He May Re-enter Politics to Uphold Pledge to Ulster.

Many Conferences—Is Logical Leader of the Unionist "Die-Hards" if His Health Permits.

(Special Cable to the N. Y. Times and Montreal Gazette.)

London, Nov. 9.—The view Bonar Law is likely to take on the Irish situation is arousing keen speculation in political circles. Pledges as the Coalition is with the possibility, in the event of the peace negotiations breaking down through a failure to satisfy Ulster's demands for protection, and by the prospect of Lloyd George's resignation and possible retirement into private life, the question of who will assume the leadership of the Conservatives in such eventualities becomes a matter of utmost importance.

Austen Chamberlain and Lord Birkenhead are both assumed to be pledged to support whatever plan the premier puts forward, and no one is yet forthcoming as to the views of Lord Curzon. This would have seemed to leave the Unionist "die-hards" without any leader of recognized standing. If it had not been understood that Bonar Law is now almost strong enough to re-enter active political life.

It is known that Bonar Law, in the last few days, has been actively interesting himself in the Irish situation and has been discussing it with Lord Curzon, Sir James Craig and Sir Edward Gosling, leader of the Southern Unionists, as well as his old cabinet colleagues. He has not yet expressed his views, but it is freely prophesied that he may suddenly declare himself as standing by his old pledges to Ulster, and ready to once more take the field against Sinn Fein.

The plausibility of this suggestion is undeniable when it is remembered he would thus be fighting Lloyd George, with whom he is now united by ties of friendship, and with equal probability Lord Birkenhead, a former lieutenant of Lord Curzon, but it seems at the moment to go too far.

The Evening Standard, tonight asserts that it is in a position to give an authoritative statement of Bonar Law's position.

It says: "It may be taken as an undoubted fact that Mr. Bonar Law has been in consultation with Sir James Craig and that they have examined suggestions which have arisen from the conference. It is certain that they are 'opposed to the opinions and views advanced by Lloyd George and Lord Birkenhead and Chamberlain on certain matters.' It can be stated with equal certainty that Mr. Bonar Law yesterday made no decision to lead a revolt of Unionists as reported and has made no final decision on the question. He is rather in the position of waiting to see how nearly an understanding can be approached."

Very Firm Views.

Bonar Law, the Standard goes on, regards Ulster as pledged most deeply to the Ulster cause, and it can be said that he cannot imagine any position arising on which he should be compelled to recede from his attitude of supporting the Ulster leaders. He is understood to have very firm views on Tyrone and Fermanagh. Bonar Law would, it is practically certain, not be a party to any bargaining on these counties.

The nervousness felt by government supporters at the results that might follow from a declaration from Bonar Law in favor of Ulster is reflected by the line taken by the Northcliffe press. The Evening News, for example, tonight declares that the rank and file in the House of Commons are inclined to resent his "present incursion into politics" which recently he announced his withdrawal and handed over his title to others. "It goes so far as to suggest that Bonar Law foresees the Irish difficulties, and this was the reason of his retirement last March."

The Daily Chronicle's political correspondent says: "Bonar Law's position is this. I have it from his intimate friends. He feels he is honorably bound by his pledges to Ulster, and he interprets those pledges as not only that there shall be no coercion of Ulster but that he is pledged to prevent any coercion of Ulster. He would regard it as a coercion of Ulster if, after the passage of the Home Rule Act of 1920, it was sought to reduce Ulster against her will to the position of a province like Quebec in an all-Ireland dominion scheme. If Ulster claimed she were being coerced and Bonar Law came forward to lead the 'die-hards,' his party might be some fifty to eighty strong in the Commons. If there were a real coercion of Ulster, which is not the intention, then no doubt Bonar Law would have over 100 supporters, but in any case he would not be in position to form a government. I learn Lord Curzon shares Bonar Law's views."
