Orphan Waits and Silk-clad Children Contrasted in First Production by Mary Pickford's Own Company

Starting is the comparison in the rearing of children as pictured in "Daddy Long Legs," screen version of the celebrated story by Jean Webster, and the newest Mary Pickford super-feature which will be shown at the Imperial next Monday. Miss Pickford has the role of Judy Abbott, a child from the street thrown upon the world a few hours after birth by her unknown parents. She is found, a wee pathetic bundle, in an ash can by a policeman. She is taken to the John Grier Orphan Asylum, where she is given a name from a life phone book. Then she starts a life which is one meal of prunes and thin soup after another. Clad in the eternal striped gingham, and forced to take the cuffs of an Indian head matron who never smiles or says a kind word unless the trustees are due, Judy becomes a twin sister to rebellion.

MISER MURDERED; HIS MONEY GONE

Quebec, July 28.—In the Chicoutimi district a Patis, Theodore Kostino, was killed and robbed to death on Sunday morning in a bank house at Kennebec. Kostino was attacked in his sleep. A verdict of murder was turned in by a jury. The victim lived alone and was exceedingly avaricious. He was said to have hidden a large sum of money somewhere in his shack and the fact that no money was found either on his body or in his place of abode leads the police to believe that he was murdered for loot.

W. on its own initiative, no arrangements being made with the company for it.

NEW IRISH PROPOSAL?

(New York Times)
London, July 25.—The Irish question is expected to come up for parliamentary discussion at an early date, when it is suggested by the parliamentary controller of the Daily Chronicle, who is in close touch with Lloyd George, the prime minister may announce a definite government policy. It has been too hastily assumed, according to this authority, from Lloyd George's references to the matter last Monday, that the government has no policy. In the contrary, the government not only knows its own mind but has formed definite conclusions as to the best course of action, which is so great a danger in misty and foggy weather, it is not unlikely, we think, that every ship which goes to sea will be eventually fitted with this new installation, and we shall all be spared the harrowing accounts of the daily press resulting from some terrible collision at sea.

CONQUERING THE FOG

(New York Post)
William Marconi's new invention for the purpose of protecting vessels during a fog was discussed recently at the annual meeting of the Marconi International Marine Communication Company, Ltd., in London. Godfrey Isaacs spoke of the direction finder, saying that, in connection with Marconi's latest invention, it promised to prove a great boon to navigation. "This new discovery provides a means whereby a ship in the dense fog could discern the approach of another ship," he said, "and by means of this apparatus, at the same time giving an approximate idea of the distance of the approaching ship. The apparatus at present being in giving a commercial shape to this new apparatus and as soon as this value on the board ship will be demonstrated. We have great hopes that this means all risk of collision at sea during the thick fog will be eliminated, to which end, of course, every ship would have to carry the apparatus, for it stands to reason that if a great liner were fitted and a small tramp were not, the danger of collision and the loss of one or the other, or both of the ships, might result. "Inasmuch as this new device should be a means of disposing of the fog, which is so great a danger in misty and foggy weather, it is not unlikely, we think, that every ship which goes to sea will be eventually fitted with this new installation, and we shall all be spared the harrowing accounts of the daily press resulting from some terrible collision at sea.
