On his direct examination by Mr. Taylor, Dr. Cochrane stated that for the past six and a half years, he had been engaged by the Canadian Pacific Railway as ship surgeon. Prior to that he had been in a hospital at Ottawa and also had an open practice. He graduated from the University of Toronto in 1893. On the nineteenth of February last, he was ship surgeon on the steamer Empress of Britain on her voyage to this port. On the steamer was an immigrant named Gantari, who was a patient of his. He was in his recollection a Finn. Witness remembered that the man boarded the steamer at Liverpool with the remaining third class passengers. It was the custom for the passengers to reach Liverpool a few days prior to the fixed sailings of the steamer. They are given food and lodging at a boarding house and are examined by Dr. Murdoch. On the day of sailing another examination is conducted by Dr. Murdoch and himself. At noon on the same day an examination was conducted by the Board of Trade physician. Witness declared that Gantari had passed the large examinations and nothing unusual was noticed in his condition. On the voyage across Gantari did not show signs of insanity. In his capacity as ship surgeon, the witness would hear of any sickness which the man might contract. Dr. Cochrane did not see the man while he was in the city. It was not until he was delivered to the steamer as a detainee that he recognized the man as having made the trip on February 12.

When Gantari again boarded the steamer he was placed in the ship's hospital and attended there by three stewards. On the second day of the return voyage the man took epileptic fits. He had several fits during the remainder of the voyage. When the steamer returned to Liverpool he appeared seriously ill.

Witness would not say the man was insane as there were no direct symptoms of insanity. Dr. Cochrane declared that the examination by Dr. Murdoch at Liverpool, prior to the man's departure, was a thorough one and if a man in any manner classed as undesirable, he is rejected.

Upon cross-examination by Mr. McAlpine, the witness declared that he had a general practice in Ontario for four months. There were between 500 and 550 third class passengers on the ship. Witness thought the man would be about 35 years of age, but personal acquaintance with him. From a certain source he had heard that Gantari had taken an epileptic fit in Liverpool, prior to his sailing for Canada.

Mr. Taylor objected to Mr. McAlpine bringing in any of the conversations with the witness had heard regarding the man, when he was not aboard the steamer.

Mr. McAlpine: "This evidence should be admitted under any circumstances." The objection was sustained by the court.

Further cross-examination revealed the facts that the boarding house at Liverpool is controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the examination takes place there. Gantari was placed in a good sized deck room in iron or handcuffs. However, he was placed in a good sized deck room upon being deposited was not placed in iron or handcuffs. He was not violent, but the witness considered it advisable to take precautions as the man could inflict bodily injury.

However, the Finn did not resort to any such means, and made no attempts to attack the stewards. He was held down on the couch during a number of attacks in the hospital.

Mr. Taylor considered that if the evidence of other physicians would be taken a royal commission was necessary to go to Liverpool. The magistrate decided that at the present stage of the proceedings this course would be unnecessary. He judicially remarked that if the commission went to the old country the court might be included in the party.

Adjournment in the hearing was made until Monday next at 10:30 o'clock.
