It does not pay to neglect keeping a few simple remedies at hand for use in sudden attacks of sickness or emergencies, and then have a long and serious illness result therefrom, and a heavy bill to settle with the doctor, when a few doses of such medicines as Hagar's Yellow Oil, Pectoral Balsam, or Fowler's Wild Strawberry, costing only a few cents, would have saved all the trouble and perhaps even life.

JOTTINGS.

"WILL you have it rare or well done?" said the carver to an Irishman, as he was cutting a slice of roast beef. "Be jabers, I take it well done ever since I came to this country," replied Pat; "for it was rare enough I ate it in ould Ireland, sure!"

YET ANOTHER "REVISED VERSION."

Full many a Jem has thought things all serene,
And spooned unconscious with his sweetheart fair,
Till the fierce parent's boot came on the scene,
And sent him squirming through the twilight air.

MARK THIS.

In taking medicine to purify the blood in cases of old sores, chronic eruptions, and most diseases of the skin, if the remedy does any good whatever it must be borne in mind that the humor must be more or less driven to the surface, and for a time pimples, blotches, sores, etc., may appear thicker, and the patients often imagine and declare themselves worse, when the fact is the disease is being expelled from the internal organism. The same might be said of BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS; but this remedy acts upon all the secretions and expels disease from all the outlets—the skin, the kidneys and the bowels. It acts in no blind or miraculous manner but by the plain common sense principles of nature's law; and any remedy is worse than useless that does not thus act.

THERE are two things which will make us happy in life—only two things. The first is, "Never to vex ourselves about what we can't help;" and the second is, "Never to vex ourselves about what we can help."

THERE is a reason for every human action. When a man out west sold a horse for a wife, a neighbour shook his head and declared that there must have been something the matter with that horse or the owner would not have fooled him away like that.

TO CLEAN BLACK SILKS.—The Parisian method of cleaning black silk is to brush and wipe it thoroughly, lay it on a flat table with the side up which is intended to show, and sponge with hot coffee strained through muslin. Allow it to become partially dry, then iron.
