from the Ukraine whatever resources she held. In several instances it was reported that Gen. von Elchhorn distributed arms and munitions to partisans of German rule in order that they might more effectively suppress the outerles of elements which demanded the establishment of a resign of Germany's oppressive tactics.

In May, 1918, the Ukrainian Government under Skoropadski sent a note of protest to Berlin indicating that it would resign if several German officials, including Field Marshal von Elchhorn, the German military commander, and Baron Mumm von Schwartzenstein, the Ambassador, were not recalled. Von Elchhorn's failure to fulfill Germany's economic policy in the Ukraine through military measures became appallingly evident to the Retchstag, and even there he became a subject of sharp criticism. He was allowed to remain, however, and since then his presence there, with a large force of bayonets, always available, has been equivalent to military occupation of the Ukraine, each organized attempt on his part to assemble grain being met by an increasing and more defant manifestation of resistance on the part of the peasant masses.
