science

Science is "knowing how." The only secret about Scott's Emulsion is years of science. When made in large quantities and by improving methods, an emulsion must be more perfect than when made in the old-time way with mortar and pestle a few ounces at a time.

A SPELLING LESSON.

A pretty deer is dear to me,
A hare with downy hair;
I love a heart with all my heart,
But barely bear a bear.

The Bell's.

"For the newly born a celebration,
For the silent dead a lamentation,
The bells forever a chorus ring;
Laughing and weeping in their song,
Ding dong! Ding dong!

Christian could not use bells, because they were obliged to hold religious services in crypts and subterranean caverns, in order to avoid the persecution of their heathen neighbors.

Bells are said to have been first used in a Christian Church by St. Paulinus in the year 400 in his Cathedral at Nole, in the Province of Campania, in Italy.

The use of bells in Christian churches and monasteries soon spread throughout Christendom.

They were introduced into France about the 550 and Boniface, Abbot of Wearmouth, brought one from Italy, in 680, for his church.

Several very old bells are still preserved in Iceland, Scotland and Wales.

"They were made of thin plates of hammered iron, bent into a four sided form, fastened with rivets and braced, or bronzed, with small pieces of metal.

Some of the Scotch bells, of the same early period, have been described, with full illustrations, in the "Catalogue of the Antiquities of the Museum of Edinburgh."

The bell of St. Gall, an Irish missionary, who died about the year 640 is still shown in the monastery of the city which bears his name in Switzerland.

Many of the churches and monasteries in Ireland are remarkable for the number and the sweetness of tone of their bells.

The celebrated Father Prosper rendered famous the bells of Shandon in the lines in which he compares them favorably with those on the continent.

"I've heard bells tolling 'Old Adrian's Mole' in,
Their tinkling rolling from the Vatican,
With cymbal glorious ringing apororous,
Or in the pleasant intercourse of social life.

Archbishop Martinelli is an ecclesiastic of marked ability and of no little experience in responsible office, being at the time of his appointment the head of the Augustinian Order, but notwithstanding his general qualifications for the office, it is not without some hesitations that he has been called, certain responsible writers have been endeavoring to explain how it is that the Holy Father's choice has fallen on a man so retiring and unassuming.

Catholics who know their Church's history will not give an instant's heed to the guesswork of these professional wiretappers. They know that the triple crown itself has more than once been placed upon the brow of the humblest and obscurest of priests. They know that their Church is a peculiar institution, when the rules of the Holy Service have no more recognition than in the planet of Saturn.

As in the French army in the First Consul's days the private soldier was and is to carry a marshal's baton in his knapsack, so every priest in the Catholic Church stands on the same level with the most exalted, and none can tell the moment when the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit may descend upon the head of the humblest of his flock.

We may rest assured that it was the peculiar fitness for the position which decided the Holy Father in selecting the successor to Cardinal Satolli. No keener or more sagacious eye ever watched over the concerns of the Church than that of Pope Leo, and his choice of representatives for the most delicate diplomatic and administrative tasks has always justified his judgment in the result.

That a man who has never left his palace since he was invested with the tiara should be invited to achieve the marvelous changes which Pope Leo has effected in the relations between the Papacy and the governments of France, Germany and Russia is due in great part to his choice of representatives. When we look at the position of the Church occupies now, under his matchless rule, and compare it with that which it held on his accession to the Papal chair, we cannot but be filled with astonishment at his wonderful gifts. We know that the great policy which he has planned and carried out is the outcome of his own genius, thought out and perfected in the recesses of a masterly mind.

We also know that for the success of that policy he has had to depend upon the fitness of his instruments. Hence we feel that the unerring insight which impelled him all along has guided him in the choice of the new Apostolic Delegate. Leo the Third loves the energetic people and he has often declared and proved, therefore he sends as his deputy the man, who, he knows, best reflects that love and is best suited by nature, experience and predilection to the exalted office of ambassador and arbiter. We welcome him, then, with all the honest cordiality of the true American heart, and we trust that his mission among us may be crowned with success and result to the lasting good of religion in our country.

Fast Atlantic Service.

Following is a summary of the contents of the papers, on the fast Atlantic service, presented to Parliament a few days before the close of the late session.

A Story.

I believe it was Father Hudson who recently quoted in the Ave Maria the cynic who said that the mildest form of dotage was, once dotage. At the risk of being called in the category I must transfer to your columns an anecdote told by Richard R. Elliott of Detroit in a delightful sketch in the last number of "The American Catholic Researcher," entitled--"The Pioner Irish Catholic Priest of the Diocese of Detroit--Rev. Thomas Cullen. Father Cullen lived in Ann Arbor and his housekeeper was an Irish dame of mature years and of no very amiable disposition.

The Vicar General of the diocese was a most excellent man, but little used to American ways and manners, not having been in this country many years. It happened one afternoon that Father Cullen had gone on a missionary visit to a neighboring village and was to return at 6 o'clock. About 3 o'clock a dignified appearing gentleman in a military uniform and carrying a grip entered the parlor gate and rang the door bell. The dame partly opened the door and as the vicar was about to push his way in the prevented him and asked his business.

"I want to see Father Cullen," he replied.

"Father Cullen is away on the mission and will be absent until 6 o'clock," the dame responded and was about to close the door.

"But I must come in," said the vicar who was now slightly annoyed. "The gentlemen in military uniform and the priest is away."

"But I must come in, my good woman," insisted the vicar.

"When about 6 o'clock, Father Cullen drove home and entered his grounds, he found the Vicar General pacing the gravel walk and reading his office. He was greatly irritated, as he related his experience, with the final emphatic allusion to "General Jackson," the good natured military man had much difficulty in restraining his mirth; while the Vicar General, of Detroit, and "General Jackson," for some years caused many to laugh when the story was related to his intimate friends--Catholic Columbian.
