Poetry.
Bath's Gains—An Ode.
By WILLIAM BARNETT.
See I what rains you gentle child
Beside the rippling stream
Disporting 'mongst the blossoms wild
How dear to him those sunny hours
Domestic by the river's side
Life's pathways all seem sprang with flowers—
Bright gems that ne'er can fade.
How sweet the view, with glancing eye,
That nature's beauties show,
And woe's their fresh perfume:
Time's yellow hair round his heart
The blissful radiance do impart:
Beauty, meekness, comely and sound
Their fragrant fairy spells around
Ere warning—ere charming
Ere brighter seem'd his hours
And him—er him—all before him
Earth seems smother'd in fairy bowers!
Now behold him! wandering still
Thro' the wild wood's shadowy glade,
Where with emulating thrill
His feelings' sorrows charm the shade:
He feels how like a spirit he is
The grove his regal hall!
His throne is by the rock-born spring:
His courtiers ministers all
His robes are of the finest art,
Or Fashion's trimm'd shafts,
The Nature's trimm'd shafts,
With pure and primal glow:
As yet he knows not of the world,
A latent spark within his burns:
A thought—a throbbing sentiment—
A wish—not 'in his durance pent—
That year in living words shall breathe
And yield that brow a deathless wreath
Ever bright 'neath ever-heightening
Kindling ardour grows and young
Trembling—gushing—upward rushing
Seeking numbers from his tongue!
Now you mountain track he keeps
Bounding 'mongst the heather-bells
Clambering o'er the rocky steeps
Where the echoes tune their shells
More chanting accents, but still as pure
From vice base slyer,
To loiter march down all allure
The fond romantic boy!
Frothy he bends his straining sight
Where the glens gleam in the sun
And panting with sublime delight
He leaves the tranquil plain!
See how boldly up he climbs
Where the leading rocks and thorns
Lead with wild impetuous din
Loud it sounds o'er ledge and lym:
Ever ringing—ever singing
Quaint responses to his glow.
As he chants the lay, of his upward way
In a Heaven taught minstrelsy!
Ere responsive! Pervin beauteous brain
Wakes the wizard light of fancy's morn!
Before the galling bars of pain
The vision-web of life hath torn,
While, hope-bird glides in embryo fold
The chanting thorns conceal
And the sanguine heart deems all in gold
Which glittering hoards reveal.
The halloo'd spring joy of mind
A world 'd by vernal pain,
Like the increase of a summer wind
O'er a fertile flowery plain,
Becomes thro' his heart's rushing:
Alas! how in transport, he
With the glowing robes, fraught
With the germ of noble thought
Ever spreading—ever shedding
To the broad, bright moon of Time,
A Heaven-born light, that may own
Till his latest bell shall chime.
