certain. The settlement will include the freedom of fish and of the fisheries; that is to say—American fishermen will be allowed to fish in our waters, and our fishermen will be allowed to sell in American markets free of duty. But how much further reciprocity may go is still very doubtful, as far as the public generally are informed.

We venture the opinion, however, that what we outlined a short time ago will be found to correspond pretty closely with the event, when it comes. There will be redeprocity in coal, iron ore and lumber, and possibly also in salt. Beyond these heavy and bulky articles it is not likely that reciprocity will go—at this time. If grain and the salt was the public of the fisheries; that is tumbling down. This, the butchers say, is really an important consideration.
