The treasure hunters along Long Beach, from Seaside Park to Beach Haven, who have for years been carrying on a deaultory search for gold supposed to have been buried in the sands by Captain Kidd, will take frost courage from a story made public yesterday by Hon. John G. W. Havens, Superintendent of the Life Saving Service. The occurrence mentioned took takes several weeks ago, but was kept quiet by Superintendent Havens, who hoped to obtain more information.

Two men, who represented—themselves as the direction of Life Saving on more morning Life. One of them carried a bag on his shoulder filled with some bulky material. After they had gone some distance they met one of the patrolmen from the station, of whom they inquired the location of the old inlet; and, on being told, said they were looking for two occlar trees standing about 100 yards back from the life to the sines. The second propose to his questions they said they were a party of surveyors sent down to locate from the piled him with questions concerning the old inlet and the order trees, and had arrangements for a yacht to meet them at that point. He told them there was big march sheet, and unged hone to see the standard should be surveyed to the sines. The told them there was big march sheet, and unged the newest them at that point. He told them there was big march sheet, and unged hone to see the standard sheet, and unged hone to every the state of the standard sheet, and unged hone to see the standard sheet, and unged hone to every the state of the state of the patrol march and the codars was only a blind to hide their real intentions.
