

	Page
SECT. VII. Account of the antiquities, ceremonies, and religion of the natives of Hispaniola, collected by F. Roman, by order of the Admiral, -	133
VIII. The Admiral returns to Spain from his second voyage, -	141
IX. Account of the Admirals Third Voyage, during which he discovered the continent of Paria; with the occurrences to his arrival in Hispaniola, -	147
X. An account of the Rebellion in Hispaniola, previous to the arrival of the Admiral, -	159
XI. Continuation of the troubles after the return of the Admiral to Hispaniola, to their adjustment, -	169
XII. Transactions in Hispaniola subsequent to the settlement of the disturbances, until the sending of Columbus in irons to Spain, -	179
XIII. Account of the Fourth Voyage of Columbus to the West Indies, -	191
CHAP. II. Account of the Discovery of America, by Christopher Columbus; by Antonio de Herrera, -	242
SECT. I. Of the knowledge of the Ancients respecting the New World, -	ib.
II. Of the motives which led Columbus to believe that there were unknown countries, -	245
III. Columbus proposes his design to the King and Queen of Spain; which, after many repulses, is adopted by the Queen, -	249
IV. Conditions granted to Columbus by the crown of Castile, and an account of his First Voyage, in which he discovered the New World, -	255
V. Continuation of the voyage; signs of approaching land; the people mutiny, and the Admiral endeavours to appease them, -	259
VI. Discovery of the Islands of San Salvador, the Conception, Ferdinandina, Isabella, and others; with a description of these Islands, and some account of the Natives, -	264