

very much desired having offered or promised to pay for any such advertisement. The same was made on the basis of the order a plan which he repeated several times with a shrewd smile.

Mr. A. Everett, of Cleveland, is a small middle-aged man, with dark hair and beard, and keen intellectual features. A strong more like a literary man than a street railway expert. He denied having paid money to the Cleveland street railway, and then looking for a charter in that city and also having said that in the United States it was not necessary to pay money for a franchise in order to be able to address. Woodworth's name was mentioned because it was thought better to be a Canadian name represented. He continued Mr. A. Everett's statement regarding the connection of the latter with the enterprise and could not say whether or not they would repay Noel Macdonald the $4,000 he paid out for notice Macdonald to drop his action.

Chamney D. Woodworth, of Rochester, had a good deal of the appearance of a wealthy society man. His testimony was unimportant. He was not aware of any current means being used to procure the tender.
