

Railroads and Hotels.

Let no one imagine, however, because Nova Scotia is a land of Acadian simplicity, that the only means of getting from place to place is by paddling the streams and following trails through the woods. As a matter of fact, the railroads of Nova Scotia are on a par with our best American roads. This is largely due to the fact that the Governments have expended large sums of money upon these works. There are a good many American dollars, also, going into this part of the world, some into railroad investments, some into mines, and some into other industries; so that you will find in travelling over the Yarmouth & Annapolis, Windsor & Annapolis, Nova Scotia Central and Intercolonial Railways, all the means of transportation to be found in our highly civilized New England. Until this year, the hotels outside of Halifax were a trifle behind the first-class hostelries of our American cities. But a great change has recently taken
