MONDAY MORNING, APRIL 14.

The League and Covenant.

Apparently the league of nations is an accomplished fact, and five great powers and several minor ones are evidently parties to it. If this claim holds the world is a long way the better for the great war.

There will be differences of opinion regarding the importance of the terms, but it is obvious that things that were important without the covenant have become unimportant with it. The Monroe Doctrine, for example, of which our country make so much, has to be specially mentioned to please them, but it is really included in the general clause providing that the members of the league "respect each other's territory and independence and guarantee each other against foreign aggression."

"A just and scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations" is the first and probably the most important clause of all. A nation's word must be like a man's word, its bond.

The machinery of the league consists of an assembly and a council. The assembly will have three representatives of each of the five great powers and of each neutral state; the council and representative of the five and one each of four other powers to be designated from time to time by the assembly. Each nation, however, shall have only one vote in either body.

The member states agree to reduce armaments and furnish full information of military and naval forces existing or planned.

All disputes are to be arbitrated, and no war to be allowed, till three months after an award, and not against any state accepting the award.

The members of the league also undertake to regard a state which has broken the covenant as having committed an act of war against the league, to break off all economic and other relations with it, and to allow free passage thru their territories to the troops of those states which are contributing armed force on behalf of the league.

The German colonies and territories of the Ottoman empire are to be administered in the interests of civilization by states (see end of page) willing to be mandatories of the league.

Equal in importance to all the other clauses, perhaps, is the agreement to accept responsibilities regarding labor conditions, the treatment of natives, the white slave, the opium, and the arms traffic, the latter, with uncivilized and semi-civilized countries; and with regard to transit and trade, public health and the Red Cross. These last mentioned clauses mean the establishment of a world conscience in a way that has hitherto been only dreamed about, and to the operation of humanitarian influences with drafting of the covenant which point more directly to the dominance of the British delegates to the conference than anything else in the agreement, tho it is obvious that without British co-operation the covenant could never have been consummated.

The Metropolitan Clean-Up.

North Toronto residents must not imagine that any of the plans suggested for their relief are the result of anything but the most earnest consideration of the public benefit. Grave legal problems are involved, and rights which are not to be ignored appear to involve proposals which otherwise would not be entertained.

Sir Adam Beck's plans, for example, are based on the consideration that the Metropolitan Railway Co. can go to the railway board and demand running rights on Yonge street.

Hence this suggestion for immediate action in a policy which will give the citizens all the accommodation they need, and will open a way to the future removal of the second series of tracks. A paved street, cheap fares and civic service are not handicapped by the limited service of the long distance cars.

It is to be noted that one of Sir Adam's remarks on Friday was that he liked to have a big stick, but he did not always wish to use it. Perhaps the presence of the big stick will be sufficient.

Sir Edmund Walker's Addresses.

Sir Edmund Walker has collected his addresses delivered during the war into a pamphlet, adding the articles he has contributed to the annual Varsity magazine supplements, and the result is a record in acceptable form of some phases of the war period as studied from the standpoint of a man of business who has been accustomed to keep all the movements of society, political, commercial, financial, academic and intellectual, under survey. The addresses were delivered in the United States and have therefore something to say of the long peace between the two countries, and they not unnaturally also dwell on some aspects of Canadian activity in the war and its effects on the Dominion, which might be supposed to be of interest to our allies, and which will become ever more and more interesting to ourselves and our children. The address to the Republican Club on Feb. 23, 1918, is not surpassed as a readable and comprehensive summary of the Canadian effort in the war.

Another address to the International convention of Life Underwriters on Sept. 5, 1918, gave Sir Edmund the opportunity to speak of the principle of insurance, and its wide application in business life. "Not even the powers of steam and electricity," he said, "have done more for industry than credit and insurance." Both principles are in application highly organized forms of co-operation, and the application of these principles may be still more widely extended.

OTHER PEOPLE'S OPINIONS

The World will gladly print under this heading letters written by our readers, dealing with current topics. As space is limited they must not be longer than 200 words and written on one side of the paper only.

A PEACE CELEBRATION.

Editor World: When news comes that peace has been signed could there not be an open air service for the people of the city as suggested by the mayor, or better two of three, in say, Queen's Park, High Park and Fairviewdale? We have had open air services before and they have been less impressive than they should have been, partly because the sound even of the hymns failed to carry far enough for people to join in; they did not know just what was being sung and each feared the sound of his own voice; then, too, open air speaking and preaching is not adapted to these gatherings. You see gestures and know an effort is being made, but you hear nothing and the effect is lost. Why not have a purely musical service, with bands and choirs to lead, say, four bands for each park? If the order of the service could be printed in full and widely distributed, perhaps thru the newspapers, and if groups from choirs could be stationed at different places in the parks to lead the singing, we might have a hearty and reverent service, which would be a reality to all. I append a suggestion, not as perfect, but as illustrating the idea and containing the elements for a service at once musical and devotional.

Your obedient servant, C.

THIS IS THE APPOINTED DAY OF VISITATION

Dr. Ribourg, preaching at St. Amand's Cathedral, Sunday evening, a Lenten sermon on "Eyes That Could Not See," said in part:
"The whole social failure of the world has been shaken to its very foundations, the old landmarks are swept away. We are caught in the currents of vast movements that are too strong for us. This is without doubt a day of visitation, a day of decision, a day of judgment, a day when the Lord draws near."

"And yet, there are men in our political, commercial and even religious worlds today, who, like the leaders of Israel of old, cannot see the handwriting on the wall. The note this time is not a warning, it is clear, and imperative. That is the temper which at every actual hour has spelt ruin to those who have flitted while Rome was burning. That is the temper which brought down the curse of old Jerusalem, which caught up into the agony of a great decision, she hid those things from her eyes, and saw nothing of what she was doing. Therefore, her house was left to her desolation, because she knew not the day of her visitation."

"ON HIS HANDS"

THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

By JANE PHILLIPS.

Bab Plans a Social Career for Herself and Her Boy.

CHAPTER XVIII.
When Neil returned after taking Lorraine home, I thought I would ask him where he had been, and who he had been with. But he scarcely had taken off his coat before he said: "I can see by your face that you want to talk, Bab, but I am in no mood for conversation. I had a very unpleasant evening, and if you don't mind I will go immediately to bed."

My wife went wool gathering. I forgot everything I wanted to say and meekly returned:
"Very well, I won't talk if you don't want me to."

"I certainly don't not tonight." He had said he had spent an unpleasant evening. I was positive he had not been with Lorraine Orton because of what Lorraine had said. If he were really tired and worried I did not want to add to his anxieties in any way. I had read often, in stories of married life, that when a man came home tired, the best, the only thing, a wife could do was to keep still. So I kept still.

It takes a woman a long time to get into the little kinks in her husband's nature. I had not yet become accustomed to all of them in Neil's. But one thing I had soon learned: if he were either tired or sleepy, it was useless to try to talk to him. I might talk, surely; but he paid not the slightest attention, and would often leave me in the middle of a sentence.

I wondered what the business could have been, that it should have given him a disagreeable evening. That it was anything but business, I never dreamed because I thought I knew he had not been with Lorraine Orton. Just why I should have believed her "the only woman who might interest Neil" I could not have explained, but the fact remained. Aside from Lorraine Orton, I had never felt the slightest twinge of jealousy.

Neil was a great favorite with them and was always joking and "carrying on" as mother would say. But there was a something about him, about his manner when with Mrs. Orton, that was entirely different than with others. At least it seemed so to me.

So above and beyond everything else I had the feeling that if I could keep Neil and Lorraine Orton apart I would have a great deal to say for myself. As I have said, I had begun to plan a social career. At first it was with baby Robert's future in view. But I soon wanted it for myself. I would show them that I did not only have money, but that I had position. I urged Neil to buy a house on a fashionable street a little east of the Avenue, and hire expensive decorators to do it over. Then, when it was ready, I indulged in a perfect riot of spending, assisted by Lorraine Orton, who had exquisite taste.

Nothing was too good for me. Indeed, it was a task to find things which were good enough. Lorraine, who was one of the elect socially, had assured me that she would sponsor me in such a way that I would soon have a select circle of friends.

I was delighted that we were able to gratify my expensive tastes. How little I realized that money does not really get people anything. I could not have believed then, so wrapped up was I in worldly things, what I firmly believe now, that more married people are separated by wealth, especially if it be quickly acquired, than by the direct poverty. As long as there is necessity for struggle, husbands and wives bear that struggle together. Their lives are so entwined by necessity, that they never get far from each other in thought or in action. Everything that affects one also affects the other. It is a matter of mutual concern how every dollar is spent.

But with a plethora of money their interests are apt to diverge. Each lives for himself, and each perhaps makes new friends who will help him further along in their lives together. Before they realize it he is going his STRENGTH.

BALLOT SOCIALISM IS INEVITABLE

Says James Simpson at Labor Temple Yesterday.

Among other things, James Simpson who addressed a gathering of more than 500 men and women at the Labor Temple under the auspices of the L.L.P., upon the labor movement militant, yesterday afternoon pointed out that the only sane method for labor and its friends to adopt in order to gain its ends was revolution by education and organization, especially the ballot, that a revolution thru any other medium would prove disastrous to the cause from every conceivable standpoint. There was no doubt, he said, that conditions in Russia prior to the revolution in that country, and one might say the same for Germany, were totally different from any prevailing in Britain, and that it was a notable fact that revolution in Britain by Britishers had in the main, been a thing in a peaceful mold, and differing from other countries in this very fact. He believed that the Dominion of Canada would follow in the footsteps of Britain in the most eventful period of history might ever record, that which was about to follow.

Socialism Inevitable.
Socialism, in other words the acquisition of the means of production by the producers, the workers, the speaker said, was as inevitable as light after the night. This was a re-alignment of millions of thinkers thruout the world, but the method of bringing such a state about was that which differentiated the Socialist from the anarchist. The anarchist was a product of continental Europe; the Socialist, on the other hand, was among the vanguard of the advanced thinkers of Britain and Canada, and could be relied upon to evolve along Socialistic but never along anarchistic lines.

Mr. Simpson in the course of his address referred his audience to reports of the social service department, which investigated conditions in "Bolsheviki" Russia, disapproving the assertions found in the general press of Canada to the effect that the Bolshevik government of Russia had seriously advocated the socialization of women. This report showed conclusively, said Mr. Simpson, that the Soviet had never adopted the immoral principle of such socialization.

Harbord Memorial Funds Should Reach Required Figure

The campaign for the funds to provide a memorial for the Harbord boys who fell in the war has been proceeding satisfactorily. Nearly 4,000 have been raised by pupils and the staff. A graduates committee is still at work under the direction of Mr. Kenneth Wright of the provincial secretary's department, and it is thought that the necessary amount of $6,000 will easily be made up.

A meeting is advertised to take place in the institute building this evening, when a committee will be appointed.

A symbolic figure in bronze, on a granite base, is suggested, embodying the idea of Newbold's lines: "But the voice of a school boy rallies the ranks; Play up! Play up! and play the game."

Ida Speaks on Two Current Events

By IDA L. WEBSTER.

It is with the greatest amount of pleasure that we extend the hand of welcome to William Russell upon his advance in position in the fire department. His appointment appears to be just exactly what everyone in this city wanted, and therefore the decision of the board of control has met with unbounded approbation.

The matter will, of course, be submitted to the city council at the next meeting, but that should be merely a form, because it would not be possible for any member to produce a man who could handle the job better than Mr. Russell will be able to.

His service heretofore has been proof enough that he will be most satisfactory as an executive head and also as a fire fighting one. And at that it must be remembered that he will not have any easy job to fill, because for one thing Chief Smith is almost in a class by himself as a fireman, and that means a very great deal in a city where there are so many with reputations such as the men on the department here have.

One of his big assets is the fact that he is popular with the men who will be his employees, and after all that is half of the battle. In this instance it means that not only will the fellows be glad to do what they can for their chief, but they will never presume to take the least advantage of him, because Mr. Russell is not built that way. He is a man who means what he says when he says it, and as for stool pigtails, it is safe to say that he will not employ any.

In welcoming the new chief we must not forget what the man who is retiring has done. He has for one thing built up the department to the extent of making the two-platoon system possible, and if for nothing else he deserves the thanks of all firemen. This appears to be the most appropriate moment for saying, "The king is dead; long live the king."

ARCHIBALD'S LITTLE SPEECH.

Thursday we, with the rest of the citizens of Toronto, had the pleasure of seeing a letter which had been sent to Inspector Pogue by one Garnet A. Archibald. You will recall that it was he who collected the six bottles of whiskey from the hotel station. As a masterpiece of the literary art we must confess that the copy of the note is well worth a place in all the family albums which infect the homes of the various citizens.

Spinked thruout the epistle are several innuendoes, which we very gladly take to ourselves. For instance, the portion which reads, "The worthy commissioners in their wisdom saw fit to hand out a decision, which if I do nothing else will serve to appease an element that has been clamoring for some action calculated to injure you."

In another spot the letter says: "When I first heard that you had enemies on the force who were seizing this opportunity and, aided by a daily paper noted for its muck-raking proclivities, were determined by fair means or foul to cause you all the injury possible, I decided that so far as I could I would stand between you and any penalty that might be imposed."

Is that not a beautiful passage? And yet the young man is so very far wrong that one cannot help feeling that he is one of the tribe who read the newspapers only for the pleasure of seeing their own name, because he had followed the course which this "muck-raking paper" has hewn he would know that The World has never clamored for the inspector to be made the goat, but on the other hand has tried to show to the citizens of Toronto that he was not to blame, as he was under the impression that he was but following the instructions of his superior officer. (This was sworn evidence.)

As for the munificent gift of $200 which was sent to Inspector Pogue by

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE UNIVERSAL PANACEA

Says Dr. John M. Tutt, Speaking at Massey Hall Yesterday.

"Second only to a future salvation, mankind is concerned in the preservation of his body," said Dr. John M. Tutt, C. S. D., during the course of his lecture on Christian Science at Massey Hall yesterday. "Christian Science has amalgamated these interests, so that, rightly viewed, religion and medicine become one, and since Christian Science, in its saving and healing grace, is applicable to all manner of disorders, physical, mental and moral, it may be termed as the universal panacea," continued the speaker.

Dr. Tutt then reviewed the earliest systems of religious philosophy and pointed out that no separation between religion and medicine was made at that time. Medicine began to separate from religion as medicine became more material and religion grew less so, he said, adding that material medicine had so developed into a system apart from religion that when Jesus began his restorative ministry and healed the sick by purely spiritual power he was termed both by the theologians and physicians a miracle worker.

The speaker said in part: "The only reason mankind has not turned to God in the time of physical distress is because of the material bias of its education. Jesus laid upon all Christians the injunction to imitate his healing works. It may be argued that Jesus conferred the power to heal upon his contemporary disciples only. Yet he said unequivocally: 'These signs shall follow them that believe.' But if the contention be true, how did Paul, who was Jesus' immediate disciple, acquire the act of Christian healing?"

The power of God to heal is available to all today, and when understood and employed in Jesus' way becomes the witness of 'Christ in you the hope of glory.'

In conclusion the speaker said: "In Jesus' day the unbelievers said, 'This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils.' But Jesus disclaimed the human mind to be a factor in His work and insisted that His was the 'finger of God' method. Christ Jesus proved that the divine mind alone was the healing power in His practice. The Beelzebub method is illustrated today in material medicine and in so-called mental science. The trend of modern medical thought is toward a frank admission toward the suggestive character of a material medicine."

the ex-alderman and the would-be controller, it was most certainly like unto a bolt from the blue. To think that a man who had played such a small, inoffensive part in the business of illegally receiving liquor should be so generous almost overpowers one. Indeed, Mister Garnet Archibald, thru this act of kindness, must be eligible for having his name carved upon the official tablet of philanthropists for Canada.

By the way, we ask the young man what he did with the remaining bottles of whiskey which he told on oath were not used? If we remember correctly there was something like four of them. As these are absolutely the property of the government, it is the duty of the citizens to know where they are, and knowing the whereabouts of them now would save the trouble of having the information sought thru the legislature.
