Then the leader rounded under the forefoot of the Guerrier, luffed up and dropped anchor by the stern on the port quarter of the second ship, the Conquerant. This anchoring by the stern, was a method introduced by Nelson. It was done at Copenhagen. A stream cable is made fast to the mizzen mast, it was then passed out of a gun-room port, and carried along the ship's side just below the lower deck ports, where it was slung by spun yard lashings and then bent to an anchor at the bow.
