COLONEL HUGHES CRUSADE AGAINST USE OF LIQUOR

Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes is continuing his crusade against the use of liquor by officers of the militia while in training camps. A cavalry officer in the Toronto military district has just been dismissed because he transgressed the new rule. This makes the third dismissal from the officers' rank since the present training period began.

According to the report made to the minister by the commanding officer, the dismissed officer was in such a state that he refused to leave the train, thereby causing considerable delay and inconvenience to the railway authorities in stunting the train as well as delay in the handling of troops and horses.

Victoria Colonist—Three forestry officials from the Dominion service are joining the chief forester in the provincial service in British Columbia, and have reported for duty this week. These are Messrs. G. H. Edgcombe, H. S. Irwin and P. Z. Coverhill. Mr. Edgcombe, who is a New Brunswick man, had charge of the location of the Eastern Slope forest reserve and was for three years connected with the management of that fine body of timber on the Alberta side of the Rockies. Since then he has been supervising the work of the fire protection of about five million acres of timber in Alberta.

Prince Paul, the Hope of Serbia, in England to Enter Oxford—Unpleasant Family History—Death of Prince recalls Old Romance
(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company)

Prince Paul Karageorgevich, nineteen years old, who has just arrived in England to prepare himself to enter Oxford University at the beginning of the fall term, is regarded in Serbia as the hope of his House, despite his parentage. The King Peter, to make an English gentleman of him by sending him to the best of English culture and learning, where the Prince of Wales is shortly to take a place among the students this fall, will be appreciated by all those who have the interest of that unhappy and much troubled Balkan state at heart.

The British heir apparent is to reside in Magdalen College, where his rooms are now being prepared for his occupancy, while the young Serbian prince will make his home at Christ Church, which is undoubtedly the college that enjoys the greatest amount of prestige. As fellow undergraduates, the English and the Serbian princes cannot fail to be thrown into one another's society, not only in studies, but also in sports, and other university interests, and young Paul Karageorgevich cannot fail to derive from this association, and from the companionship of his English fellow students, those notions of honor, and those ethical standards, which one is accustomed to associate with an Oxford training—ethics that are so entirely different from those prevailing in Serbia.

Prince Paul can well be described as the "hope of Serbia," because his two cousins, George and Alexander, both of them studying at Paris, one at the military school of St. Cyr, and the other at the Sorbonne, are so unpopular that their names from the country just at present is a matter of congratulation. The conduct of Prince George, the elder of the two, has been so extremely regrettable that three years ago, as may be remembered, he was compelled by the government to renounce his rights of succession, and his status as Crown Prince, to his younger brother, Alexander. Had he refused to do so, he would have been placed on trial at Belgrade for the death of his valiant father, who had succumbed to brutal treatment. Prince Alexander, though better behaved, is a mental weakling and in frail bodily health, and besides he made himself so detested in the army, that he has been removed by the latter as also by the government, to resign his office of inspector general.

Prince Paul, on the other hand, is a stalwart, handsome, sunny-tempered lad, who has been carefully brought up, first

The Unreasonable Maid
By RUTH CAMERON

A MAID was once sent out from an employment bureau to a position, and on finding that the room in which she was expected to live was a wretched little hole, miserably furnished, with no paper on the wall, no arrangements for heating and only a tiny window, told the lady of the house that she did not wish to stay, because she felt she could never make that room look homelike.

Whereupon she departed. And now the lady of the house goes about telling this experience as an illustration of how homelike a room should be. Uppish housework girls are becoming. And almost everywhere she tells it she receives sympathy. "The idea," they exclaim, "you simply can't do anything with them nowadays, they're so independent. Wouldn't stay because she couldn't make the room look homelike. What do they expect—guest chambers?"

My friends, it seems to me that in that little incident is illustrated one of the chief causes of the maid problem.

That a housework girl should want to have her room look homelike and should be willing to stay in a place where she couldn't make it so, seemed the sense of absurdity to these good women. They regarded it as an unwarrantable independence on her part.

And yet a maid's chamber means much more to her than her mistress's bedroom does to the mistress, for the maid's bedroom must also be her living room.

If these women, who were most of them kind-hearted in other relations of life, had thought of the maid who wanted a homelike room as a human being, as themselves, they wouldn't have seen anything extraordinary in her demands. But they were so in the habit of looking upon her as a distinct species of animal life—the genus maid, that they thought of applying to her the test of similar desires and needs.

There was a little story in the joke columns of one of the magazines the other day, which, to my mind, came almost as near pathos as humor. It ran something like this: A maid had asked leave to go home to her mother who was very ill. The mistress said she was glad to see her, but she must stay as long as she was needed. At the end of a week the maid writes something to her mother: "Dear Mother, I will be back real soon, and please keep my place for me. Mother is dying as fast as she can."

Probably that never happened, but if it did would assume the attitude many mistresses try to thrust upon her it certainly could have come to pass.

Undoubtedly there is fault on both sides in the servant problem. Undoubtedly maids are often trying, incompetent, untrustworthy, and a thousand other things. But I don't believe that anything can excuse mistresses from this unfeeling and un-intelligent attitude towards the maid as a human being.

When mistresses cease to assume this attitude, and get the thought that their maids really are women with natural desires for happiness and homelike rooms and appreciation and pretty clothes, perhaps household work will not be so much degrading of occupations and will not prefer to it the most exhausting and ill-paid work in shop or factory.

At St. Petersburg, and afterwards by English tutors at Belgrade, where he had managed to keep his name singularly clear from any such scandals as have disgraced every other member of his house. It is fact he looked upon both at home and abroad as destined one day to occupy the throne of his uncle, King Peter.

Paul's father is the king's only brother, Arseno, who is so utterly disreputable that even the Serbians will not consider him an even honorary member of the family. He has been driven into exile, and he has permitted the king to grant him any rank, even honorary, in the army. He makes his home in Paris, and is a familiar "specimen" to those American tourists who think it interesting to study the shabby side of cosmopolitan life in the French capital.

He was given the advantages of an education at the Imperial School of Pages at St. Petersburg, where Alexander III., and also the late Czar, wished to hold him in reserve as a candidate for the Serbian throne, then occupied by the Obrenovitch dynasty, Czar Alexander III, besides giving him a commission in a regiment of Trainee Cavalry Cossacks, arranged in marriage for him with the enormously wealthy Aurora Demidoff, Princess of San Donato; but so utterly imposed upon was his conduct, so degrading his whole behavior, that after she had borne him a son, Prince Paul, he was compelled by the permission of the emperor to divorce him, and he was requested to leave the country.

Prince Paul remained with his mother until her death at Turin in 1904, when he, an eleven year old boy, was taken in charge by King Peter at Belgrade, his father not being allowed to have anything to do with him. He has inherited all the vast property of his mother, whose family is the richest in Russia, and is thus the only member of the Serbian reigning family who possesses an independent fortune. King Peter and his two sons having nothing but the allowances which they receive from the Serbian treasury.

Fortunately for him Paul escaped having a stepmother, one of the most notorious women in Paris at that time. For during the two years that preceded the shocking tragedy at Belgrade that brought King Peter to the throne his good brother Arseno was one of the part proprietors of perhaps the best known of the all-night cafés at Paris which are nicknamed "les bouillottes." This particular one was managed by a very handsome woman, whose name was Jeanette Yvonne, but who had been known in the "demi-monde" for several years, as "Zizi." She was the ideal manager for such a place for what she did not know of the "gay" and "easy" of Parisian life, was not worth knowing; besides which she was singularly good-natured, level-headed, and not hard-hearted; in one word, as the French say a "matresse commune."

Prince Arseno was so impressed by her many qualities, that in the spring of 1908 he repeatedly pressed her to marry him, and made no secret of the fact that he had offered her his hand and name, and as she refused, she, however, absolutely declined to entertain his offer, preferring, as she explained, to work for a salary and a share of the profits, rather than have to fulfil the same duties without remuneration, as his wife.

In June of that year his elder brother, Prince Alexander, became King of Serbia, and he believed himself transformed from the crown prince of a despotic nation into a "Prince of the Blood." "Zizi" always characteristically refused the hand of Arseno, and that she considered herself infinitely more respectable as a former member of the "demi-monde," and as the manager of one of the best known American Bars in Paris, than as the wife of a prince and his royalty to so shocking a tragedy as that which brought the house of Karageorgevich to the throne.

The Court of Berlin has just been deprived of one of its most decorative and impressive figures by the death of Prince Carol of Romania, the high official of the Imperial Household during the reign of Emperor William I. The time, however, when his name came most prominently before the public was when his lovely wife Countess Elizabeth Hatfield, eloped in 1880 with the late Prince Herbert Bismarck, then unmarried. The treatment which she received from Herbert was one of the blindest spots in his career. For, instead of endeavoring to repair the wrong done her by marrying her as soon as she had been divorced by her husband, he yielded to the importunities and bitter reproaches of his father the old Chancellor, deserted her at Venice, without making any provision for her, and left her indeed absolutely penniless—without even enough money to pay the bill at the hotel where they had both been staying.

Had it not been for her brother Herman, Prince Hatfield, Duke of Trachenberg, and her sister, the wife of Field Marshal Baron Loo, the unhappy woman, who had sacrificed husband, children, fortune and social position for Herbert Bismarck's sake, would have starved. As it was, she almost succumbed to the grave malady brought on by the shock and humiliation of her desertion. It may be remembered that some time later Herbert contracted a wealthy marriage with Countess Marguerite Hoyos, one of the granddaughters of the inventor of the Englishman Whitehead, the inventor of the famous Whitehead torpedo.

Daily Hints For the Cook

CHERRY NECTAR.
Stone the cherries and boil them with a little water; strain and boil the juice with 1 lb. sugar to each pint of juice for 15 minutes, then put in the cherries and boil a very little longer. Serve cold.

"PERFECT" BOILED RICE.
Blanch a cup of rice by throwing it in a saucepan with plenty of cold water over a quick fire. Let boil two minutes, then drain, rinse in cold water and drain again. Now add the rice little by little to one quart of madly boiling water to which a teaspoon salt has been added. Keep the water boiling as rapidly as possible, and do not stir. As soon as the grains are soft pour up the water, then set the rice in the oven, uncovered, to dry about ten minutes will be long enough. Rice prepared this way is delicious, and may be served about a meat dish of chicken, veal, etc., or with cream and sugar, as a pudding.

JAM RULES.
Do not allow tin, iron, or pewter to touch the jam, as any of these are liable to spoil the color.

Everything employed in the jam making must be scrupulously clean.

The sugar must be of the best.

The fruit must be gathered on a dry day, any that is imperfect or damaged being discarded. It should be well drained. The jam should be boiled until, on dropping a little on a plate it yellows. Jam should be bottled fast to preserve the color of the fruit and kept well stirred.

All cum must be carefully removed as it rises.

Jam must be stored in a cool, dry place, free from drafts, and in an even temperature.—Eldora Lockwood in Woman's World for August.
