status war resisters in Alberta and Saskatchewan should phone W.R.I.P. collect at (204) 774-9323.

Mr. Maloney repeated, that if the men are still wanted in the U.S., an analysis of their Selective Service file by W.R.I.P.'s lawyers can lead to dismissal of their charges. The reason so many of the draft evaders are no longer wanted is because the personnel employed by the Draft Board did not fully understand the complex Selective Service Law and therefore committed legal and procedural errors that would render it impossible for a U.S. Attorney to prosecute. For Military AWOLs an analysis of their files has sometimes led to men receiving honorable discharges and they are thus free from prosecution.

W.R.I.P. has been performing this function for the past 6 months, so as to reunite those men who opposed the war in Indochina with their families, though the men merely want to visit in the U.S. Of the 1,500 men who have contacted W.R.I.P., 750 no longer face prosecution in the U.S. The rest of the cases are still pending.

In addition Mr. Maloney said, W.R.I.P. is also building a unified body of supporters to fight for a universal and unconditional amnesty.

He said even if Indians were allowed to control the entire budget "it would still not be adequate to meet our needs," and advocated looking to other federal and provincial departments for aid.

Buchanan said he was "delighted with that approach." He added he would like to see the structure of those departments changed so that "people like Harold Cardinal can occupy some of the top spots."

Throughout the discussion Cardinal stressed an issue by issue revision of the Indian Act. The Alberta Indian Association has recently drafted an Indian Act of its own. When asked if any work or revision was taking place Buchanan answered with a flat, "No."
