JANUARY.—You cannot plough this month, but you may consider what we have to say about subsoil ploughing. The subsoil plough should be used in spring, following in the furrow of the breaking plough; loosening the soil six or eight inches deeper. The breaking plough should turn the soil up six inches deep, making the entire loose ground twelve or fourteen inches deep. A crop of corn is best to grow on the sod, and the effect of subsoiling will be seen in the crop by the time it is two feet high. The heat of the sun and the exposure of the soil to the air, together with the presence of the corn-roots, prepare the subsoil for turning up to the surface. The next spring, plough the field so as to place one-half of the subsoil on the surface. At the next ploughing all this loosened subsoil can be turned to the surface.
