The Roumanian Campaign.

be good. Wifh the enemy firmly established in at least five passes on the Transylvania border and holding the whole of Dobrudja as far north as Hirsova, one may be forgiven for doubting that he has been "definitely that in any thinking that in any halted" or for thinking that in any case it is high time he was. But the particular mention of the locale of the particular mention of the locale of the late Roumanian victories gives the impression that there may be something in them after all. The situation at Predeal and Kampulung has been, and still is, a serious menace not merely to Bucharest but to the whole of Roumania. These places are very near the great artery of Roumania, the railway line running north to Russia and paralleling the border. Possession of Buzeu and Ploeshti by the Germans would be almost a death blow to Roumania, and they are both on this railway line. It almost a death blow to Roumania, and they are both on this railway line. It is therefore heartening to hear that the attack has been held up in this district and turned back in several of the valleys nearby. Nothing further is reported from Dobrudja where, despite the extent of the invader's rains the congretions are less import-

There may be truth in the report from Rome that Russia is preparing a tremendous offensive in Galicia and Poland, but the lateness of the season would seem to discount its probability. Winter will soon set in there, whereas there remain several weeks yet of fighting weather in Roumania, given normal conditions. Such measures as Russia may adopt of this nature will probably be designed to assist Roumania by a diversion. This is quite feasible, and we should not be surprised if the present recovery of the Roumanians were due in great measure to the French victory at Verdun. The various fronts are now indun. The various fronts are now in-terrelated and interdependent as never before, and the fact constitutes Germany's peril. The coup against Roumania must go all the way or proclaim itself a failure, and failure to achieve the utmost will mean eventual if not immediate disaster. Verdun comes appropriately into prominence at this moment to warn Germany of this truth, for there is not a little resemblance between the two adventures. That the sequel will be the same and the result as evident in Transylvania as to-day at Douaumont we have every hope and not a little reason to expect.

At Cochrane Street Centenial Church

At Cochrane Street Centennial Church yesterday the Rev. Dr. Bond conducted the opening exercises in connection with the morning service, the prayer being offered by the Rev. Dr. Fenwick, Superintendent of Newfoundland Missions. Rev. Dr. Whyte, Superintendent of Missions for British Columbia was the preacher, who told of the great resources of British Columbia, its immense area and its people, and the work being done in the cause of God and Christian Missions. Dr. Whyte gives an illustrated lecture, this evening, in Gower Street Church, and to-morrow evening in Cochrane Street School Room on a "Summer Visit to the Yukon." Silver collection for missions.

At the evening service the Rev. Dr. Bond occupied the pulpit. The Roll of Honour was read by the Pastor, after the singing of "Lead Kindly Light," by the choir.

The pastor then announced his text, "I will make a man more precious than fine gold," and preached a masterly sermon on Character. We cannot lose our identity in the crowd, the individual conscience gives the true revelation of duty. If your conscience says not to do that which is wrong don't do it for any one. Individual character is the finest thing in God's Universe. Be yourself and make your influence felt in Church and State. We all have a personal responsibility and must give an account of our stewardship. We are all God's children. He has redeemed us and we must fit ourselves to live as His-Children. Quite a large congregation was present including a number of visitors now in the city.

Rev Dr. White at Wesley Church.

White addressed the Gower Street Sunday School, and at night spoke to a very large audience in Wesley Sunday School, and at night spoke to a very large audience in Wesley Church, basing his remarks on the 9th and 10th verses of 76 Psalm—"When God arose to judgment to save the meek of the earth. Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee and the remainder of wrath wilt thou restain." He referred to the splendid optimism of the men who had recently met at the General Board of Missions in Toronto, who had gathered from the east and from the west to consult about the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. It cheered all hearts to know that in the times of stress and strain the income was $3,000.00 over last year. No one who looked over the personnel of the Board could say that they had forgot the needs of the nation in their anxiety for the funds for missions. Scarce one minister but had sent a son to the front and some three placing their flesh and blood at the services of the nature. three placing their flesh and blood at the service of the country. Through the enlistment of so many young nen probationers there was a scarcity f missionaries. He then referred to the work on the Pacific Coast amongst the settlers, and in the interior amongst the loggers, and the Indians on the rivers and was heard with the closest attention. He lectures at Gower Street to-night and at Cochrane Street to-morow night. Police Court

The expenditure on St. Patrick's will be met by a further issue of Corporation Bonds similar to the issue made in connection with the Cathedral at the beginning of the present year, and similarly financed from the Offertory Collections of St. Patrick's. Already a considierable amount has been subscribed towards the new loan, and subscriptions for the remainer will be received until the end of the year.

The matter of insurance against war risks was discussed at some length, and the matter was referred to a small committee for investigation consisting of Hon. J. D. Ryan, Messrs. George Shea, W. J. Ellis and John Barron.
