Street Kitchens in Paris.

the many queer trades that flourish in Paris, few are more curious than the street kitchen that provides food for the poor. To them the street is a place of business.

is usually found in a side street, away from the main thoroughfare. You can bring food, if you like, and eat on one of the tables. Along the wall, there hangs a slate on which the names of half a dozen dishes making up the menu, are written in chalk.

beside the slate there is what appears to be the doorway of a kitchen. In reality it is a very busy place. The kitchen that supplies the many hundreds during the day is open. In front of the doorway is a large charcoal burning stove, which furnishes an abundant supply of soup, vegetables and other eatables. On the shelves all manner of restaurant utensils are stored.

most appetizing small portions and you realize that you are very well served. Two vegetables at 25 cent each and a ragout, the day's order, the proprietor nods in and takes a dish off a shelf and disappears towards the back of the kitchen to return with a dish smoking with a movement of the left hand or she sweeps a helping of soup from the plate, and as she transfers the artichokes, cooked in half a sheet of newspaper is a string of them, and put the steaming plateful, which you pay for, and depart to the wine. "Best Men" Once Had to Help Catch Bride.

The "best man" is an essential feature in all our marriages, and can be traced back to the days of "marriage by capture," when the "best man" was the comrade called upon by the bridegroom to assist in the dashing of his bride.

The "honey-moon" was not always a pleasure-trip as it is now; originally it was a rapid flight of the newly married couple to escape the wrath of an outraged father. There is no doubt that the bride and bridegroom deemed it advisable to keep out of his way for at least a month, to allow time for his fows of vengeance to cool down.

The custom of giving presents to bridesmaids originated in a form of toll. The bride's girl friends went through the form of preventing the bridegroom and his friends from taking her from her home, a mock battle ensued, each party pelting the other with sweet-meats, and this was finally settled by the bridegroom making presents to all the girls.

The custom of throwing an old shoe after the departing couple is another link with the past, but writers on the history of marriage disagree as to its origin. According to one view it originated in the "marriage by capture" days, when, during a fight at the bride's house, the nearest things that came handy were thrown. Another explanation is that it was a symbolic act on the part of the bride's father, signifying that he renounced all authority over his daughter.

The throwing of rice was symbolic of abundance and fertility, and clearly expressed the hope that the bride would live in plenty.

The wedding cake, still cut by the bride, is one of the oldest marriage customs. The taking of food or drink together by the bride and bridegroom was always the principal, and sometimes the only, ceremony among primitive people, and this is still the case in many parts of the world today.—Tit-Bits.

bath towel. Dry carefully with the soft towel, patting the skin gently. Never rub the baby's tender skin with anything less smooth than the palm of the hand. A little pure talcum powder may be used in the creases and folds of the skin, under the arms, and around the buttocks; but it should not be used so freely, so as to clog the pores of the skin and never should be used until the skin has been dried as thoroughly as possible with the towel. A highly perfumed powder should not be used. The bath should be given as nearly as possible at the same time each day, at least an hour after feeding and at first should be only three minutes; later it may last (5) minutes. As the baby grows older and stronger he may be allowed to play in the water which is beneficial to the system, relaxes the muscles, and aids in overcoming many wrong conditions.—U.S. Public Health Service.

ONE THING SURE.

One thing is true, when other things are less—the taxes rise, and higher still they rise. I view the past, the golden yesterday when twenty bones would make my record clear. Yes, twenty bones would cover all my tax, and yet I yelled like forty-seven yaks. "This Government," I used to sadly say, "just holds me up, and bears my wad away." A hundred bones, where once I coughed up ten, I now dig up for tax-collecting men. Assessors come and check my bottom plunk, this thing is true, though other things be bunk. And yet, perhaps, if taxes were to shrink, the land we love would soon be on the blink. We're paving roads, and building finer schools, and ornate jails to house bootlegging toils; the money goes, blown in with princely grace, to make the world a nobler, better place. If this is true it is not wise to roar because we're clutched far tighter than of yore. If it is true, we should be dead game sports and gladly help our colleges and courts help build the jails and boost the football team, while banners float and eager eagles scream. One thing is true, when other things are less—if there's no gas the motor always dies.

Care of the Baby.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

WASHINGTON.—The "Care of the Baby," a new and enlarged edition of a former publication of the same name, is contained in the recent number of the Weekly Public Health Reports of the U. S. Public Health Service and is now being reprinted for general distribution. Its eminent practical character is shown in the section of bathing the baby. Baby, it says, should be bathed at least once a day. During the hot weather one or two extra sponge baths may be given; but as a rule the daily bath should be in a tub bath. It can be done more quickly and thoroughly, and the baby is not so liable to take cold. The room should be warm; an open fire is desirable in cool weather. The water should be comfortably warm but not hot, about 90° to 95° F. It may be tested with the bare elbow, never the hand. However, a bath thermometer is best. Everything needed should be in readiness before baby is undressed. In a small wicker basket, painted white, should be kept a cake of pure white castile soap, a small bottle of olive oil, pure talcum powder, boracic acid, four dozen safety pins of assorted sizes, and a roll of absorbent cotton. A clean wash cloth, clean towels, and a full set of clean clothing should also be in readiness. To undress the baby, take the clothes off over his feet. If held on the lap, a large bath towel should be used to prevent its tender skin from coming in contact with the rough or worn dress and to receive it when lifted out of the tub. More conveniently he may be undressed on the table. Before putting the baby into a tub, wrap him in a small blanket or large towel, and wash his face, head and ears, being careful not to get soap into his eyes and mouth. Very little soap is needed. It is most important that the skin should be rinsed thoroughly. Pat the skin dry with a soft towel, taking care to dry well back of the ears and in the soft folds of his neck. The eyes should be cleansed with absorbent cotton, dipped in boracic acid solution. Squeeze a drop into each eye. The mouth and nose should then be cleaned with an applicator dipped in boracic acid solution. An applicator is made by twisting a small tuft of absorbent cotton upon the end of a wooden toothpick in such a way as to make a rounded pad. If made correctly, the cotton will not slip off readily. Be careful not to injure the ears. It is better to ask your pharmacist or the nurse just how to cleanse them correctly. It is well to lay a bath towel in the bottom of the tub and put in only a small amount of water at first. If baby is plunged in, he may be startled and may never enjoy a tub bath; but if the water is added gradually, while baby's attention is diverted to something else, he soon learns to enjoy the morning dip. First soap the baby's entire body thoroughly; then place him in the bath, holding him with the left forearm under the neck and shoulders, the left hand under his arm, and lifting the feet and legs with the right hand. Support him while in the bath with the left hand and arm. Sponge the entire body with the right hand; then lift him out and wrap him in a
