Eating Their Own Weight.

SMALL BIRDS WITH HUGE APPETITES.

Imagine a man eating a breakfast of two sides of bacon and four loaves; a lunch of forty pounds of beef, half a bushel of potatoes, four loaves, twelve large apple puddings, and a few pounds of cheese; and finishing the day with a five-course dinner, each course weighing twelve pounds! That man would be eating his own weight—and probably would not experiment twice. Yet the robin devours twice its own weight in food every twenty-four hours.

Young birds are great eaters. Sometimes they have to give in when the supply of worms exceeds their capacity, but they make valiant attempts to eat all that is brought to them. Thrushes and blackbirds are particularly voracious.

Devouring a Horse. That harsh crier, the raven, is a bird gourmand. If he has been short of food for a few days, and then has the good fortune to find a dead sheep, he gorges until he is unable to fly. He leaves only the skeleton. Buzzards and hawks are big eaters. The former, of course, prefers carrion, while the hawk likes to kill and eat his own prey. He has an immense capacity for mice and similar small vermin, and does not hesitate to swoop down on a chicken run when hungry. In one day he eats twice his own weight of food.

The greatest bird gourmand is the vulture of Southeast Europe. Seven vultures can strip the carcass of a horse in half an hour. After such a meal they can fly only a few yards. They stand with puffed-out bodies, drooping wings, and blood-shot eyes, uttering hideous cries.

As the North Sees It.

(Twillingate Sun)

Another matter has now quietly crept in on the street corner assembly, and that is that the P. U. Trading Co. are making preparations for packing 4000 casks of fish. Coopers are busy making casks at Port Union and some men say that they guess—if it is so—that Mr. Coaker's markets which he claims to have opened up are just large enough to take care of P. U. fish and that the country generally will not benefit by Mr. Coaker's fish tour. We hope that it is different, and think that at least the Hon. Minister has at least learned to love his neighbour as himself, even if he has had a slipping off of departmental responsibilities during the past few months; and besides being absent from the House where it is within its walls that the seasonal pay is really earned.

A matter for the Government to consider would be taxation reduction to the utmost limit. Hundreds of our brainy and energetic people are leaving the country this spring and summer. Thousands will have gone if the stream continues by the end of the year. Where, then, is our prosperity coming from, if through the bars of taxation and other yokes of bondage, our labouring class becomes extinct.

The regular rate of duty has not been lessened on any article up to the present; all that was taken off was the extras, as we are well aware, and yet the Advocate would have us believe we are wonderfully benefited by having the super-sales taxes removed.

European markets are yet not very promising as exchange is high, and selling fish is a hard problem. However, considering that things are beginning to brighten a risk must be taken so exporters say, to keep the price going. This is worthy of praise and firms who are hard hit, realize that if the wheels of commercial machinery are stopped, sad will be the outcome for all.

Co-operative marketing is about all the Advocate talks about, and will try till doomsday to make us believe that the old regulations were—although the means of pretty nearly ruining the country—the salvation of the fisheries.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

Safest and best family medicine

A Doubtful Compliment.

Every speaker at the dinner had advertised the town, which was inland some eight hundred miles from the coast. The speakers all said that had the city been on the coast it would have been the world's first city.

The visiting speaker was called on next.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I am impressed with your city as much as you are, and believe I can suggest a way in which you can get your wish."

All leaned forward, and he added: "This is what you should do: obtain a large pipe, run it from the centre of your city to the ocean and, if you can suck as hard as you can blow, the ocean will soon be in your city."

Don't Be a "Knocker."

The dreamer blazes out a path to lands remote and dim. Far heights men never trod, until the vision beckoned him. And ere the jungle closes round where first he struggled through, The builder comes upon his heels to make the dream come true.

Dreamer and builder, hand in hand, across the earth they go: The trails they make, the towers they build, the wondering world may know. And when their temples stand complete, challenging heaven's crown, The knockers gather round, and start to talk the structure down.

For this was builded in a way that breaks all proper rules; And that design is incorrect, according to the schools; And this offends most shockingly some fundamental law; And that—like this, and all the rest—displays some hopeless flaw.

And so the critics saunter home, confiding each to each, How mightier than spears or sword is man's great weapon, speech; And each congratulating each, that by their words alone, The dreamer's dream, the builder's work, are wholly overthrown.

And while the critic fellows sleep, the builders come again, And recreate from dust the dream the knockers would have slain; Not perfect quite—proclaiming still the crudeness of the clod— But wrought for stalwart service in the toil of man and God.

And while the knocker folk deplore, and strive to fix the blame, Dreamer and worker, hand in hand, toll onward just the same; Content to build as best they know—as every builder may— And caring not one single hang for what the critics say! —Ted Olson in "Forbes" Magazine.

The Arabian Nights.

MANHATTAN COMPANY'S LATEST SUCCESS.

If you happen to be a grass widow, don't flirt with another woman, especially if she happens to be a cabaret girl. That is the moral of the "Arabian Nights," which the Manhattan Musical Comedy Company produced at the Casino last night. Despite this warning, it would be difficult to resist a flirtation with any girl who looked so charming as Rosalie Columbler, (Ruth Oswald) even if one's wife was not away from home. Arthur Hummingtop (James Liddy), is the unfortunate husband who attempts a mild flirtation under the motto that "when wife's away, hubby can play." The situation abounds in complications of a most amusing nature, in which poor Arthur finds that it will be wiser in future to collect postage stamps, instead of making goo-goo eyes at other women while his wife is not at home. Ruth Oswald gave a sparkling performance of a cabaret girl, and it was a marvel her vocal powers were left unimpaired by the numerous encores which her enthusiastic admirers compelled her to give. Miss Thropp again gave ample proof of her versatility and her entrance on the stage was always the signal of loud applause. As a character actress, it would be difficult to find her equal. Marguerite Torrey made a wife whom any man would be proud of, and it was regrettable that the part did not permit of a further exhibition of her delightful dancing. Mary Cox made a very convincing niece, and has the makings of an excellent actress. James Liddy, as the husband, was very good, and his realistic acting sent thrills into the hearts of every flapper in the audience. Henry White was good as his friend, and his powerful voice was heard to great advantage. Billy Clifton was his old, imitable, fun-making self, and kept everybody in the best of spirits with his ludicrous, exaggerated, English accent. Teddy Wilde made a proficient and stately butler, except when his master wasn't looking. The spec-talities were much appreciated. Edgar's violin selections were well received, and Misses Ford and LaRue, charming duet. Thomas Williams will be produced for the remainder of the present week.
