What Is Love—Thrills or Companionship?
Dorothy Dix
Diagnoses Love Symptoms
Thrills and Heart-Flutters Are Delightful, but the Ability to Chum With a Man or Woman Is the Acid Test of Love.

A man who says that he has always believed in love at first sight is greatly troubled by his inability to determine the state of his affections as regards a certain girl.
He didn't fall in love with her at first sight because they made mud pies together when they were children, and he has known her all his life. He isn't smitten with chills and fever when he sees her, and he doesn't experience any particular thrills when her hand touches his. But he is utterly nappy and contented when he is with her, and some and restless when he is away from her.
He depends on her, and relies on her strong common sense. He enjoys the things that she enjoys, and her presence gives him a zest to any occasion. He feels that life without her would be a poor, flat thing, and yet he doesn't know whether he is in love with her or not, because he isn't experiencing any of the wild, surging emotions he expected to feel when he fell in love.
If I were diagnosing the young man's case, I should say he had fallen in love at first sight. Love doesn't affect everybody the same way. It all depends upon the temperament of the individual. Some have violent attacks that are soon over. With others the temperature hardly ever goes above normal, but these are generally chronic cases that last as long as the heart beats at all.
The love-at-first-sight theory is a pretty and romantic one. It intrigues our fancy to believe that, as our eyes idly roam over a crowd, we shall single out the face of some man or woman, and know that out of all the world we have found our own. But in real life these sudden love hunches do not work. It may be that the man who jostles us in the street car, or the girl in the blue hat we passed on the street, is the mate nature intended for us, but no pricking of the thumbs or palpitation of the heart apprised us of it.
Occasionally, a couple of foolhardy young creatures, who pin their faith to the love-at-first-sight fallacy, do meet, like the color of each other's eyes, and rush off to the preacher without even getting enough acquainted to find out each other's first name, and how many minutes they like their eggs boiled. But these sudden weddings almost invariably end in disaster, and add one more proof to the assertion that those who marry in haste repent at leisure. For in nothing are we so easily deceived as in affinities. It is practically impossible to spot them at sight.
Of course, there are hysterical people who are always violently emotional. Such a man falls in love with a woman, and is mad about her until he gets her, and then he drops her with a dull, cold thud. Such a woman falls in love with a man, and dies of a broken heart if he doesn't return her love, but if he does she wears it and finds some other soul mate.
Practical, sane, well-balanced people rarely feel these storms of passion that sway the hearts of the neurotic. They do not consider committing suicide because of a blighted love. They do not believe that the world will have nothing left of joy in it if some man or woman fails to return their affections. They do not have hectic flushes at the sound of a footstep, or perish with longing if they are separated from the beloved one twenty-four hours.
This is nonsense. They must love according to their nature. With them love is a flower of slow growth, but it strikes its roots down into the solid earth, and is a hardy perennial that blooms year after year, instead of perishing within the hour, as does the wind flower of passion.
The man who waits to marry until he falls in love at first sight had as well wait to make any other move until he is struck by lightning, for the one is just as likely to happen to him as the other.
Just as few men are great lovers as are great tenor singers, which is a good thing for women, because great lovers seldom make good husbands. Emotional men are not only the hardest to live with, but they require fresh objects upon which to expend their sentiment.
The kind of love that endures the strain of matrimony best is a glorified friendship that is not based on thrills, like the common sense. It does not see a man as a romantic hero, nor a woman as a full-fledged angel, but as human beings, and recognizing them as such, loves them, faults and all. It does not ask the impossible, but it sees that it is getting companionship and sympathy and understanding.
This love looks before it leaps. It takes suitability into consideration, for it knows that the slogan, "All for love, and the world well lost," is the most misleading propaganda on earth. It loves with its head as well as its heart, and that sort of love stands the test of time and the wear and tear of life.
The ability to chum with a man or woman is the real acid test of love. Thrills don't count because they are canned after marriage, anyhow.

IRONING SITTING DOWN.
"I don't mind doing the ironing one bit; I love to iron, especially the baby's dainty things, and my table linen, but oh, my feet get so tired," was the plaint of a young housekeeper who was trying to do all of her own work, especially since she got the electric clotheswasher.
"Well, dear child, sit down to your ironing!" exclaimed the baby's grandmother. "You don't have to stand up at that ironing board hour after hour. The ironing of small pieces can be done just as well sitting down as standing up. In fact, only the really large things, like sheets, tresses, and so on, have to be done on a high, free board under them."
"Now sit down in this armless, cushioned chair, lower your ironing board to the level of your lap, put your basket of sprinkled pieces beside you, and begin. Lay this piece of oilcloth over your lap to keep the dampness from coming through, and start all the large things, such as towels, dinner napkins, and shirts, by ironing first the side farthest away from you. As you iron it, let it slip over the edge of the board and hang down the other side. This keeps the garment from becoming mussed on your lap.

"If you have a good many things to iron, you'll find it a rest to stand up at that ironing board hour after hour. The ironing of small pieces can be done just as well sitting down as standing up. In fact, only the really large things, like sheets, tresses, and so on, have to be done on a high, free board under them."

SOCIETIES and THE HOME

WOMEN WRITERS TO ASSEMBLE IN WEST
An Elaborate Program Has Been Arranged For Women Writers of Canada.

Canadian Press Despatch.
Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 13.—Women writers from all sections of the Dominion will assemble in Vancouver on September 24 for the third triennial convention of the Canadian Women's Press Club. Business sessions will be held on September 24, 25 and 26, and on the 27th the members will go to Victoria, where they will be the guests of the Victoria branch of the organization.
An elaborate series of social functions are being arranged for the members, including a cabaret, luncheons, dinners, boat trips, receptions, motor drives and swimming, and riding parties. Feted from Monday morning when the Vancouver members will entertain at a luncheon, until the boat trip about the harbor Saturday, opportunities will be extended to see Vancouver and Victoria in all their September glory.
It will be the third triennial meeting since the Canadian Women's Press Club was organized in 1904 at the St. Louis World's Fair. Edmonton, Alta., was the scene of the first triennial in 1913, and Montreal of the second in 1920. The cause was a lapse of seven years between the two gatherings.
Members of the Women's Press Club are scattered over the Dominion from the Maritime Provinces to Vancouver Island.

WATFORD YOUNG PEOPLE HOLD JOLLY BANQUET
Special to The Advertiser.
Watford, Sept. 13.—The members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Congregational Church of this village were the guests at a banquet at the home of Miss Maude Marwick, Huron and Wall streets, on Tuesday evening, when the losing team in the recent contest, captained by Miss M. Marwick, entertained the winning team, captained by Miss Estelle Craig, to a chicken supper.
It was a happy company which gathered around the well-laden tables and merriment ran high throughout the evening. The following toasts were honored: The toast to "Our Church" was responded to by the pastor, Rev. T. De Courcy Taylor; the toast to "Our Society" was proposed by the treasurer, Russell Duncan, and responded to by the president, Thomas McCormick; the toast to "Our Guests" was proposed by the vice-president, Miss Elsie Brown, and responded to by Miss Estelle Craig, captain of the winning team. Souvenir "C. E." buttons were presented to each member present. Following the supper Miss M. Marwick took charge of the program. Splendid reports of the summer school of the Ontario Christian Endeavor Union, which was held at Elgin House, Lake Huron, were given by the three representatives of the society to attend: Miss Jean McCormick, Miss Elsie Brown and Miss Gladys Lamb. Farewells were said to one of the members, who is leaving the village, Miss Carrie Healey, and arrangements were made for a large delegation from the society to attend the fall rally of the London and District Christian Endeavor Union, which is shortly to be held in the Southern Congregational Church, London.
Forms Checked Pattern.
London, Sept. 13.—There is a novel use for the tiny platinum, so fashionable now. On an afternoon dress they are so arranged as to form a checked pattern across the front of the skirt.
