on and sketch of the mouster ap officer of the British steamship Nestor, then in the Malacca Straits, announced a shoal. Surprised to find a shoal in such a wellknown track, Captain Webster watched the known track, Captain Webster watched the object and found that it was in motion, keeping up the same speed of the shap and retaining about the same distance as when first seen. "The shape of the creature," and the captain (in an affidavit before Donald Spence, acting law secretary to the Danish Supreme Court at Shangai). "I would compare to that of a girantic frog. The head, of a pale yellowish color, was about twelve feet in length, and six feet of the crown was above the water. I tried in vain to make out the mouth," he proceeds, but the mouth may have been below water. The head was immediately connected with the body without any indication of a neck. The body was about forty-five or fitty feet long, and of an oval shape, perfectly smooth, but there may have been a slight ridge along the spine. The back rose some five feet above the surface. An immense tail, fully one hundred and fitty feets in length, rose a few inches above the water. This tail I saw distinctly from its junction with the body to its extremity. It seemed cylindrical, with a very slight theer, and I estimate its diameter at four feet. The body and tail were marked with alternate bands or stripes, black and pale yellow in color. The stripes were distinct to the very extremity of the tail. I cannot say whether the tail terminated in a fin or not. The creature possessed no fins of paddle so far as we could porceive. I cannot say if it had lega. It appeared to progress by means of an undulatory notion of the tail in vertical plane."

It appeared to progress by means of an undulatory notion of the tail in vertical plane. The may be remembered that in 1873 a monstrous cuttlefish was encountered by two fishermen in Conception Bay, Newfoundland. When attacked, the creature threw its long arms across the fishermen's boat, which it appeared to regard as a veritable object of prey; but one of the fishermen cut off the festiacle with an axe, on which the cephaloped withdrew, apparently regarding the man's action as unfair. The tentacle was 25 feet in length; and as the fisherman considered that it was cut off fully ten feet from the body, the entire length of the tentacle must have been about 35 feet. They estimated the body as 60 feet in length and five feet in diameter.

In 1861 the French war steamer Alector encountered a monster cuttle at sea about 129 miles northeast of Teneriffe. The crew got a nosee around the body, but unfortunately is alipped to the tail, which it pulled off. The weight of this little bit of the creature was found to be over 40 pounds. It was estimated that the body was 50 feet long and the weight not less than 4000 pounds.

The most remarkable account of a sea mo a stee of this kind was that given by the captain and officers of the Pauline. It was sworn to on oath by George Drevar, the captain; Horatic Thompson, chief mate, and John Landells, second mate, and by the steward and a seaman.

On July 8 we observed three large sperm

John Landells, second mate, and by the steward and a seaman.

On July 8 we observed three large sperm whales, one of which was gripped round the bodythy two turns of what appeared to be a huge serpent. The head and tail appeared to have a length beyond the coils of about 30 feet, and a girth of eight or nine feet. The creature whirled the whale round and round for about fifteen minutes and then suddenly dragged it to the bostom head first. I five days later the same creature, or a similar one, was seen about two hundred yards from the ship, darting along the surface, head and neck being out of the water. Only Captain Dreyar and an ordinary seaman saw this. But a few innutes later the captain, first mate But a few ininutes later the capean, has made and two seamen saw the monater raise its neck and head above the water to a height which they estimated at sixty feet.

Some ten years ago Commandant Villeneuve and the officers of the French man-of-war the Lendre saw a creature corresponding in appearance with the sea serpent traveling rapidly along, the head slightly raised above the water and with a sort of mane streaming backward, while the back of a long body sould be seen under the water. A creature exactly answering to this description was seen by Major James Harding, then an officer in the King of Vigis' army, passing within a few yards of his cance, and swimming towards a small island cutside Suva Bay, known as the home of the Big Snake. Captain, the Hon. George Hope, of the British ship Fly, when in the Gulf of California, the sea being univaility dain and transparent, saw at the bottom a large marine animal with the head sed sed sed sed in the figure of an alligator, but the neck midd longer, and with our large paddles instead of legs.

My own belief is that some, at any rate, of the steries relating to supposed sea serpents are to be explained by the theory that there still exist creatures such as Capt. Hope described—long-necked reptillan forms akin to the Dolichodeiros of former ages. Such creatures would present all the characteristics recognized in the so-called sea serpents. Their paddles would enable them to advance rapidly without perceptible undulation (which the sea serpent has been observed to do, and with no actual serpentine creature could do.) The great objection to thus view has been that we find no fossil plesiosaurs in tertiary strata. But this objection loss its force when we note that the characteristics are the sharks and the sturgeons) is closely related to forms existing in the secondary era, while no trace of any of those forms has been found in the intermediate strata down to our own time. The chimera certainly exists, for it has been seen captured. It is exceedingly rare, however, and up to the beginning of the present enter the sea serpent might have urged against the chimera.
