Bill Edmund O'Tracy stood in the bows of the pursuing boat...

CHAPTER XVI. A FRESH DISASTER. "Grievous and rough as a field of ripe grain...

"Yes, my friends, everything is arranged—satisfactorily, I trust—and we march to attack them in an hour's time."

The speaker was Teige Beagh O'Dowda, whose tall and stalwart figure was the centre of a group of Irish officers...

"Ha!" ejaculated O'Dowda, "that shark yonder is going to show his teeth. His eye is crooked and his bit of iron is gone to fight the sea-monster."

Bang!—another shot from the ship. Not too high this time, sergeant-major. The ball struck the boat almost "twixt wind and water."

The green water hissed and gurgled in his ears, and he felt as if a crotchet of red hot iron were pressing around his head.

Here he soon became sensible of his whereabouts. Land was not far distant. The rugged shore of Oyster Island was distant only a few paces.

Landwards, however, he toiled—toiled and laboured with all his remaining strength to reach those friendly though bare and bleak rocks that were stoutly resisting the fierce onset of the breakers.

But at length a receding wave left him deposited on a heap of sand and shingle, and he breathed a fervent prayer of thanksgiving as he found himself safe and unharmed save for a few slight bruises from the rough stones.

"Saved, thanks be to God and the Virgin!" he exclaimed aloud, as he panted and gasped for breath and strength.

"No, O'Tracy, not yet," hissed a malicious voice over his head; and, looking up, he saw standing over him the dark figure of a man standing on the cliff.

"No, look at me, avia," continued the individual, "for I'm the last man your eyes shall ever see on earth. Look at me, O'Tracy, you speak of the Evil One—Ha, ha! you know me now—Ned O'Leary's face is not readily forgotten by his friends and enemies."

"O'Leary, for the love of heaven, have mercy!" entreated the helpless and exhausted O'Tracy, his face of life increasing, as it were, with a great bound at the prospect of the fatal death which hovered over him.

"I ask mercy from this cloak-and-key, and the renegade poised a large, heavy stone in his two hands—'ask mercy from this stone that's going to smash your skull to pieces. My soul! how my heart leaped when I saw your white face dancing under among the waves! And how I laughed in my heart when I knew you were at my mercy—at the mercy of the man whom you drove forth an outlaw from his kith and kin—of the man who swore to have your heart's blood, and who is now going to keep his promise—now, now!"

"Hugh raised the stone over his head. O'Tracy closed his eyes and murmured a prayer.

"And now," cried the renegade, in appalling tones, "may my curse, along with this stone, fall upon your head, and—"

"No more did he say. A vigorous push from behind sent the miscreant, stone and all, flying over the cliff, and our hero, opening his eyes, saw grazing down upon him the feet of sergeant-major Teige Beagh O'Dowda, who immediately seized him by the hand and drew him from death to life.

"Just in time, manree," exclaimed O'Dowda, cheerily; "another instant and your family bushes might have done for you. The scoundrel is gone to feed the crows; come along."

"He led O'Tracy to a rising ground a short distance off. Here were assembled several men with dripping garments, the survivors of the fatal occurrence in the water. The spot commanded a view of the entire of the little island and of the surrounding water. The lately bleating calves were still sending up black sulen wreaths of smoke, and in the bay, which expanded beyond, and which was now illumined by the full flood of the morning sunshine, was visible the spectacle of a ship on fire.

"It is all over," said O'Dowda; "those infernal plerats have victimized their ships with the corn and cattle of the poor people of the island here, and plundered and set fire to that unlovely barque yonder, which the merchants of Sillgo had loaded with various commodities; but McDonogh has driven the rascals off, and we're late for the port."

"But Kathleen—that is, the young lady, where is she?" inquired Edmund, his heart throbbing.

"Yonder," replied O'Dowda, pointing to the two ships which now with all sail set were disappearing on the horizon;—"poor lass, I hope no evil may befall her."

O'Tracy spoke not, but stood gazing in a mute, listless way at the far-off ships, his pallid face a very picture of utter despair.

thought that his descendants should be the last in the field. Well, colonel," said he, turning to Mac Donogh, "is there battle in the air? What does Mars send us?"

"Merely a repetition of the countermanded order of yesterday; we are for the road at once."

And the colonel, taking a note from his pocket, read as follows:— "Sir, I shall desire that you march, towards the falling in of night, with all the Companies on this side of the water, where I shall meet you; you are to leave one Pike-man out of every company to guard the baggage left at Crewly, whom you are to require to keep good watch upon such things as shall be left with them, and not to spoil anything belonging to the Abbey, as they shall answer it at their peril; so till meeting, I rest

"Yours, Co. Lucas Talaff. Dromahere, March 31."

So ran the style and orthography (peculiar to the period) of the colonel's letter.

THE IRISH NATIONAL LEAGUE. CONVENTION AT KILKENNY—ALLEGIANCE TO PARNELL—HIS RETIREMENT TALKED OF.

LONDON, April 17.—Mr. Parnell, speaking at a banquet last evening in Dublin, said there were five hundred branches of the league doing efficient work in Ireland, and their efforts were an exemplification of the virility of the National League.

DUBLIN, April 18.—A convention of the Irish National League was held at Kilkenny to-day. Resolutions were adopted reaffirming allegiance to Parnell, and the promise was made to subscribe to a fund for the pay of members of parliament.

MUCH IN A LITTLE. Many proprietary medicines, if they are at all, require such a large quantity to produce effect that it makes them very uncertain, and expensive remedies.

ON THE BANKS OF THE BOYNE. THE IRISH LEADER AT DROGHEDA—HE IS PRESENTED WITH THE FREEDOM OF THE BOROUGH.

DUBLIN, April 15.—Drogheda presented Parnell to-day with the freedom of the borough. In his address Parnell said the borough showed a remarkable example of the results attained by the Land League, congratulated them on their progress Nationalist ideas had made, and expressed the hope that the extension of the franchise would enable them to return members to Parliament who would vindicate their claims to self-government.

USE PROF. LOW'S SULPHUR SOAP for Prickly Heat, Itch, and all diseases of the skin.

SIR VERNON BARNETT ON THE OCCUPATION OF EGYPT. LONDON, April 16.—Sir V. Barnett, Secretary of State for the Home Department, in a speech at Derby this morning said:—"The Government will dissolve Parliament at its own time; not at the time of the Conservatives. The Government want to Egypt reluctantly, and would have retired but for the events in the Sudan. England has no right to annex Egypt. England has quite enough to do as it is. We are able to maintain our embroilment with other countries."

THE FALSE PROPHET. He who prophesies falsely of the weather, leaves off his flannels and overshoes, and catches cold, is indeed unwise. If you follow this false prophet your rascal lies in taking Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. It is the best cough cure and the safest throat and lung remedy known to medical science.

A FENIAN LEADER'S MANIFESTO. LONDON, April 16.—Patrick Joyce, secretary of the Fenian Brotherhood, in a manifesto addressed to all Irishmen said:—"The Brotherhood has no cause for rejoicing at the disappearance of John Bull. England never before felt the vengeance of the ex-patriated Irish with such crushing force. The honor of that queing scientific warfare is due to the Brotherhood. We have no convincing proof of the efficiency of science, when handled by intelligent and determined men. We advise our brothers to persevere in the glorious war and regenerate Ireland. We are resolved to push the work with redoubled energy, and recommend Prof. M. Messeroff to all Irishmen as an exponent of the resources of civilization."

SORE THROAT. and painful affection may be promptly relieved by the application of Hagyard's Yellow Oil. It acts internally at the ligaments of the throat. In group, often glandular, rheumatism, and any equally efficacious.

BURNED AT THE STAKE. DEER ROASTED TO DEATH. April 16.—News has just reached this city of two terrible crimes committed about Lyons, about facts in the case are:—At a late hour on Saturday night a woman, who had a husband, entered the house of Mrs. [Name obscured] and she prepared a supper for him. The husband, who was a respectable man, had just returned from work, and he was early back yesterday morning, and he was in the habit of staying at the house of his wife. He had no other children.

for mercy he confessed his guilt, whereupon a fire was at once kindled, and the unfortunate murderer was made to expiate his crime by one still more horrid—a trait of [Name obscured] roasted to death. No carts have been made, and it is not likely that these who dealt out this shocking retribution will be held accountable to law.

THE MEDICATED FLUSE, pale, hollow cheeks and proreous appetite, indicate Worms. Kreemson's Worm Powders will quickly and effectually remove them.

A TRAPPER'S GOOD LUCK. HIS INDIAN FRIENDS TELL HIM A SECRET THAT BRINGS HIM A FORTUNE.

St. Paul, April 17.—Olivier Daunsils, who lives at Pineson Arthur's Landing, in St. Paul. He arranged for the sale of four mining locations, 160 acres each, at the Rabbit Mountain Mine, two others to a syndicate for $200,000, and the other to Chicago and Milwaukee capitalists for a like amount.

Daunsils has been a trapper among the Indians for many years, and became very intimate and friendly with them. As a reward for his many acts of kindness, an Indian named Pegeep Nini revealed the location of these rich silver mines to him. They are twenty-five miles southwest of Port Arthur, nine miles north of the railway, and eight miles from the Kamistiquia River.

He bought the location from the Government at the time of his discovery. Ten tons of ore recently shipped to New Jersey realized $5,000 per ton. Daunsils attributes this good fortune, which has made a wealthy man of a trapper, to his kind treatment of his Indian friends.

A CASE MUCH TALKED OF. The case of Mr. John McElroy, of St. Ann's, N.S., who was afflicted with a serious dropsical disease of the kidneys, the best medical aid having failed, his life was despaired of. Two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters were used. His statement is vouchsafed by J. D. McLeod, J.P., who knew of his condition. The cure is considered marvellous in his town.

THE FIRST BOMB OF CONTENTION BETWEEN BLAINE AND CONKLING. WASHINGTON, April 17.—One of the men who managed to save the money to make the Northern Pacific stock was G. M. James B. Fry, formerly [Name obscured] and now a war correspondent in the United States Army.

He remembered the obligation and repaid it by letting Fry in on the subscription to the Northern Pacific debt. The Government's fortune, and will help Villard's [Name obscured] to get the money.

Fry was the hero over which Blaine and Conkling, the two great political mastiffs, had their famous fight in the House of Representatives twenty-two years ago. He was Proter Marshall at New York, and his acts were the subject of Congressional controversy. Conkling attacked and Blaine defended him. Since that duel the two statesmen have not spoken, and have never alluded to each other except in terms of contempt.

But, queer enough, Mrs. Blaine and Mrs. Conkling have always been friends; never intimate, but always cordial, and the two gentlemen have invariably recognized each other's wife. It is said that at a dinner party years ago Mr. Conkling escorted Mrs. Blaine to the table and Mr. Blaine Mrs. Conkling, but they did not discuss G. M. Fry.

LENTEN SERVICES BEFORE THE POPE. ROME, April 17.—A sermon is preached every Friday in Lent before the Pope in the Vatican. The sermon is delivered in the Consistory Hall. This Lent the main door leading to the Pope's apartments. It corresponds with the Swiss Hell and the anticatheter of the Paracetamol. Before the delivery of the sermon the pope's throne is removed. A large crucifix stands in front of the pulpit. The Pope sits in a little gilt box on the left of the preacher. The Major Domo and the Maestro de Camera sit on two wooden benches at his side. The Sacred College occupy benches behind the crucifix. The Bishops who are present and the heads of religious orders are seated behind the Cardinals. If the Cardinals arrive after the beginning of the sermon they are relegated to the private chapel of the Pope. A pontifical court officer, clothed in purple, stands near the pulpit. The sermon is preached by a Capuchin. A lay brother accompanying the Capuchin is conspicuous on the right of the pulpit. When the Pope enters the room the preacher kneels, kisses his foot, and asks his blessing. On entering the pulpit he kneels before the cross and bows to the Holy Father. He recites a short prayer while on his knees, and then begins his sermon. After the sermon he announces the day and hour of the next sermon. He then again kneels before the Pope and gets his blessing.

These advent and Lenten sermons are delivered by a Capuchin father, Benedict XIV. He is the Capuchin this privilege on March 2, 1843.

THE DYNAMITERS. PARIS, April 17.—The dynamite used in the London outrages was procured from an authorized factory in France. Two hundred pounds was paid for it. A letter received in Paris from an Irish sympathizer with the dynamite party, states that the dynamite campaign is not ended. Two hundred and fifty pounds of dynamite has been sent from France to England within the past three weeks. A girl, resident of Cork, and a sister of a dynamiter living in Paris, is carrying it across the channel. The girl is also the medium of communication between the dynamiters in Paris and those in Great Britain and Ireland. The woman who conveyed the dynamite used in the Victoria depot explosion to London, has gone to America. The dynamiters in England are opposed to isolated attempts, and contemplate a general explosion in various parts of the country on a certain day and hour.

Political Control in the Province Lost to the English—The Remarkable Change that has Come over the French Canadians—Taking Possession of the Local and Provincial Governments.

For years after the conquest the French in the Province of Quebec made little progress in might save multiplication. Quiet, religious, and inoffensive, perhaps, they strook to their farms and allowed a British oligarchy to govern them without murmur or complaint. When, in 1837, their burgeois became, as they thought, too heavy, they rose in armed rebellion, and although they were easily crushed, still the revolt practically secured to them equal rights and privileges with their Anglo-Saxon fellow-citizens. Still, the French Canadian element was slow in asserting itself, and many circumstances which the English-speaking vote was quite inconsiderable continued to elect English members. But since confederation all this has been changed, and at this moment the French Canadian majority in the province has assumed an aggressive tone, which grows daily and fairly astonishes many of the old British residents who have been accustomed to think of the French as "the inferior race," to use the term once employed by a Governor-General in an important State paper. Already the French have seised upon the municipal governments of all the cities, including Montreal. The Provincial Government is entirely in their hands, for, although the Cabinet of seven usually contains two English Canadians, these latter have no real voice in the administration of affairs, and the Legislature of sixty-five members contains but twenty English-speaking members. The French Canadian proves to be as fond of office and of feeding at the public crib as anybody, and the civil service of the province is practically closed to any one with an English name.

In the city of Montreal, where the English minority are by all odds more wealthy and more enterprising than the French majority, the civil government is controlled by the French. It is safe to say that if the English element were abstracted from Montreal, the remnant would not amount to a fifth-rate Massachusetts village. The great business houses are English, the shipping trade, the carrying trade, the finest wholesale and retail stores are all English. The leading banks are English. There are not three French members on the Stock Board. Any public subscription list to assist in alleviating any great calamity, or in promoting any public movement, will show that about 90 per cent. is given by English-speaking people. The French have not even a theatre or a concert hall. All the leading places of this description are owned and controlled by English Canadians. The French, in fact, spend little and contribute little to the general prosperity of the city or province. These facts are admitted on all hands, and the feeling of the British part of the community, who, aware of this state of affairs, feel themselves outvoted and intolerantly treated by the majority, are anything but satisfactory.

The outlook is far from hopeful for the English. The French continue to increase in numbers, while the English are deserting the province, and in twenty years its English population outside the city of Montreal will be inconsiderable. The indications are that the demand of the French Canadians for a more complete recognition of their provincial autonomy will be eagerly granted by either political party at Ottawa. Sir John A. Macdonald, the leader of the Tory party, depending upon the support of the Lower Canadian Conservatives, has long been at their mercy. The Hon. Edward Blake, the Liberal leader, anxious to win their adherence, is pandering to their pretensions. What the end will be no one can foresee. It may be peaceful; it may not. But he will not be trampled on, and if he is trampled on, he will say it.

As he has said, both languages are allowed in the courts and both are spoken. Lawyers plead in either tongue, witnesses testify in French or English, as they please, and the judges, necessarily familiar with both, speak usually their native language. The country being under British rule, English, of course, is the official language, the use of French having been a favor granted at the time of the conquest. At the Assizes held at Riviere du Loup en bas a county town about 150 miles below Quebec, in a action brought by an English non-resident against a French inhabitant of the locality, recently, the presiding Judge, a Frenchman, insisted that all English should speak French. This they refused to do, and the judge thereupon dismissed the case. At the opening of the court next day the judge, having apparently reflected upon his conduct, asked the counsel to have the case reopened. They refused, and the case will be taken to the Court of Appeals. The matter has caused much excitement, and there is talk of impeaching the judge before the High Court of Parliament. Straws show which way the wind blows.—N. Y. Sun.

"SENDING COALS TO NEWCASTLE." The President of the French Republic sent some little time ago to the French Ambassador at Constantinople three handsome emblems made in exact imitation of the much-prized Damascus blades, for presentation to the Sultan's three sons. An Oriental potentate receiving a present from such a quarter would probably have preferred some product of European art to a counterfeit of what he can get better at home. "If you want to make an Englishman a present," says a French paper, criticizing M. Grevy's gift, "you would not offer him a dozen of pale ale, an article of Sheffield cutlery, or a coat made by Poole."
