

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
INTRODUCTION, . . . . .	1	Vanity of attempting to account for this communication, or explain the mode of it, . . . . .	28
I.		The principle of common sense, . . . . .	29
Mind and Matter, the two sub- stances about which philosophy is conversant, . . . . .	13	Coincidence between Reid, Oswald, and Beattie, and the French phi- losopher, Father Buffier, . . . . .	29
Importance of distinction between Matter and Mind, . . . . .	14	III.
Two classes of philosophers, ac- cording to the predominance assigned in their systems to Matter or Mind, . . . . .	14	The Idea of Externality not that of an external world, . . . . .	30
Consciousness the only immediate object of cognition, . . . . .	14	Origin of the idea of matter, . . . . .	31
Consciousness the starting-point of philosophy, . . . . .	15	IV.
How the mind passes from a state of simple consciousness to the idea of self, . . . . .	16	Muscular resistance as distinguish- ed from tactual, . . . . .	35
Descartes' Enthymeme, . . . . .	16	Dr. Brown the first to take notice of this distinction, . . . . .	35
The German "Ego," . . . . .	16	Matter, what, as first apprehended by the mind, . . . . .	35
The amount of Descartes' Enthymeme. Fichte's formula, . . . . .	17	Other properties of matter, . . . . .	35
The idea of personal existence, the first idea of the awakening mind, . . . . .	18	Idea of substance. Substance and quality distinguished, . . . . .	35
II.		The mind informed of its own ex- istence, and its own qualities, pari passu with its informa- tions respecting matter, . . . . .	39
Origin of the Idea of Externality, . . . . .	19	This indicates the laws of our being, . . . . .	39
Dr. Brown's account of this idea, . . . . .	21	V.
Remarks on Dr. Brown's account of this idea, . . . . .	24	The idea of Extension, . . . . .	40
Error of Dr. Brown in denying any peculiar intuition in order to this idea, . . . . .	24	What gives us this idea, . . . . .	40
Special difficulty in regard to the mode of communication between Mind and Matter, . . . . .	27	The ideas of magnitude and figure, . . . . .	41
		How the infant mind is concerned in the attainment of its first or primitive ideas, . . . . .	41