

Shirring at the Waist Gives a Princesse Effect

HE term lounging-robe really covers a multitude of styles, from the original type-a plain Mother Hubbard—through the legions of kimonos to countless extravagances of lace and crepe de chine, embellished by a wealth of hand embroidery.

There's one woman—a very occasional typa, indeed—who has an elaborate robe hanging in the closet of every room in her big house—ready for her guests. And such robes as she indulges in are "dreams," indeed.

Heavy crepe de chine (there's a wide difference between heavy and "sleazy" crepe de chine), in exquisite pale shades, is embroidered all over, Japanese fashion, with heavy, fat slik flowers, kept French fashion, all fin a single tone—the exact shade of the robe itself. Instead of its being characteriess, because of the jumble of French and Japanese ideas, it's the loveliest creation imaginable, and makes you long immediately for some slight indisposition—just enough for an excuse to pose picturesquely in it.

Blow

ting This

The fire pt out of aber mill, and lath s made thriving en years effort to he most point of r visited only by of 1850, business town was ter to six the first clapboard flame is verheated pulley, or a matter king near s terrific. le and a ly did the nbers and hundred arely had for many and vests ny of the hich were s. Not all back of It was night not had been ything in ratus was

and the 100 yards heroic efcottages

e erected s several tructures, it in 1904 of $10,000.

machin-

and Mr. d Archie. the busis, several oard ma-ingle mamake of ave conbout the sons both at work. and inlighted electric light for aser's ed-esidences ds, about nd 100,000 lank and This was outh Am-ents all shipped st of the

St. John Monday.

finished ich was the quan-three and d at $12 he probher stock or a total hing has lding. It mill runngements mpany's they had own and er Rock one of

to marry

th. Some

s haven't

is a certain re for each of itching ruding piles, it. See tee-your neigh n use it and Soc a box, at or, foronto.

Few

with a background of some pale tint, livened with a group of butterflies, or cherry blossoms, any of the characteristic decorations of the mysterious, alluring East, done in the gay colors that signalize that work.

For the rest, there's a pale, iridescent heap of exculsite robes and sacques: lin-

For the rest, there's a pale, iridescent heap of exquisite robes and sacques; lingerie styles, with the waist shirred or tucked into the long graceful lines of princess styles; there are sheer swisses, with lace, or embroidery, set in in odd, beautiful ways; there are mulla, with ribbons pulled through box-pleats, and some of delicate French stuffs, siry and beautiful, that are almost submerged under the billows of fine lace that continually form and break over them.

She is the rare exception, of course. There aren't many of us who can afford to induge our whims in such luxurious forms, even for our single selves, let alone for our guests; but every woman has to have at least one of some sort or other, and she owes it to herself to have as pretty a one as possible, T'S high time some one came forward with a wild denunciation of the white-shoes habit. Not that white shoes aren't one of the prettiest of styles that has come out in many a long year, but it's the promiscuous wearing of them that demands censure. Go into town shopping. As you walk down a busy street you see girls in dull-blue gingham shirt-waist suits, or in colored linen coat suits, with the plainest though saucy, with their tip-till) of walking hats, the whole charm of the plain little costume spoiled by a pair of white shoes. Spoiled—because white shoes belong to white suits and to white and delicately colored dressed. What characterizes a well-dressed woman is an exquisite observance of details. Unless every part of her costume blends perfectly with every other part, she has made radical mistakes. Wearing the wrong shoes has been so frequent a happening that even otherwise well-dressed women seem to have become accustomed to it to the point of doing it themselves.

tion—from the plainest of shirt-waist suits to the flufflest of all evening gowns—white shoes are far preferable to any other sort. But there their usefulness—which includes correctness—ends.

Tan shoes belong to the sort of clothes which could all be included under the head of morning dress. They are distinctly informal, and so are out of place with the simplest of summer evening dresses.

One would think this self-evident, but look around a little and see how many girls are outraging shoe proprieties.

With shirt-waist suits and colored linen suits, with the whole family of short-skirted dresses, there's nothing quite so all-around satisfactory as tan. But, in the wrong place, there's nothing more absurd.

As a matter of fact, most of this summer's shoes resolve themselves as belonging to one or the other of the two classes—the tan class or the white. Patent leather is the one brilliant exception which can be worn, with almost equal propriety, any hour in the lay.

and to keep it in the daintiest sort of order.

Kimonos—like the Jsps—are constantly winning new laurels, long and short kimonos being far and away the most popular cf all the styles. Even sacques made on different patterns have kimono sleeves; while an occasional kimono returns the compliment and shows its faith in "foreign" styles enough to have sleeves built on anything but kimono patterns.

The newest kimono—pretty and as inexpensive as the stupidest wrapper—is of swiss, embrofdered with rather large dots, and trimmed with bands of strong color. In some of them the sleeves are rather short—to get away from that flapping around the wrists that some women strenuously object to.

Next to kimonos, a different class, in fact, are the dressing-sacques with skirts to match, both trimmed prettily with valenclennes lace. Lawns, sprink-led with the tiniest of dots, swisses, flowered stuffs and plaid muslins, are all satisfactory to make them of; and having the skirt to match, takes away the carelessness of appearance that usually is so marked in the wearing of a dressing-sacque.

But, naturally, there's a far cry between kimono belongs to a room, just as a bath-robe does, and the other makes a possible dress for your own breakfast table.

Kimonos of cotton creps are worn by warm-blooded individuals all the year round, and the prettiest of them are those queer, printed things that only the most Oriental of Oriental shops had for awhile. They were priced according to their exclusiveness then, but now are to be had almost anywhere for very small sums. The most serviceable are the plain crepes, for they wash, and wash, yet always look well.

Matinée and Skirt that Match Belled in Empire Pashion

As to the winter stuffs and styles—they are many, but the most popular is the kimono made of albatross, or French flannel, or soft wash flannels—the kinds with enough cotton in them to successfully prevent shrinking.

In luxurious affairs, those of white China silk, lined with pink albatross—a delicate shade—are exquisite, and as they do up well, aren't extravagant. They're troublesome, both to make and to launder, but beautiful enough to pay for the trouble.

Both princess and empire styles have invaded the ranks of negliges—the empire belt, high under the arms, being promised for many of the new fall styles.

In sacques, the very short, very full ones are best liked, made of any one of a hundred materials, and trimmed simply or elaborately, as you please. The prettiest, and best in taste, are the simplest ones, trimmed enough to be pretty, but in ways that will launder well.

As to colors, use only white or the delicate shades—the element of daintiness must be present to make the robe or sacque a success, and it is never present with a dark neglige.

Short Dressing Sacques Are in Paror

PLAYS FOR SUMMER RESORTS

It's mighty seldom that a lot of girls staying at the same summer resort, with nothing in particular to do, don't get up some sort of an entertainment by way of letting off extra steam.

Usually, it's a play, for there isn't a girl living who doesn't like to play a part, and who doesn't dream dreams and see visions of herself in some gorgeous indefinite future, but always as the star of a famous company.

It is better in choosing your play to have it entirely for girls, or, at most, with only one or two men in it, for most of them are in business, and very few of them like to waste vacation-time in the constant rehearsals that are needed. One-act plays are best—there's no troublesome attempting to set scenes; no having to rig up a curtain, whether or not it is convenient.

One-act plays are best—there's no troublesome attempting to set scenes; no having to rig up a curtain, whether or not it is convenient. When you've arranged your "properties," the responsibility of the scene can be instantly dismissed from your mind.

Costume plays are the easiest to give—the very dressing-up lending a sort of moral courage to the greatest amateur of all. And costumes can be fings together in a couple of hours, with plenty of pins to fasten refractory folds and drapings at the last moment.

The greatest mistake most amateurs make in providing costumes is in doing the work too carefully, and so spoiling the effect. That gown is only for one wearing. "Tacking" carefully will last as well as sewing, and an effect is much more easily got by using as few stitches as possible.

Every woman knows how the style of a hat can be marred by the too careful sewing of the trimming—the very trimming that in its pinned-on stage was full of individuality. Costumes belong to that class, and only the effect should be thought of.

Plenty of plays come—one-act plays—just for girls, with a dozen or so of amusing situations in each play waiting to be worked up into something piquant and interesting.

There is one where the whole interest centres on the curing of a woman who has suddenly come into a fortune and imagines herself ill. It is full of absurd prescriptions, with a spiritualist who obligingly goes into a trance, and ends wild ringing of the doorbell—her letter was just in time—and the wild dash of the madcap to open that door herself.

Writers for amateurs have been very accommodating, writing plays with any number of characters from one to a dozen, and usually accomplishing the difficult task of making them all stars. Occasionally a play is written which obligingly revolves around the only one of the lords of creation permitted to take a part in it. And there's rarely any trouble setting one man to rehearsals when he's constantly made the centre of attraction!

"Character sketches" are clever if done even fairly well; they're really very little more than a monologue, delivered with action and scenery.

In getting up a play, elect some one as stage manager, but let it be some one with plenty of executive ability. Another girl should be "property man," and should keep the little things all to gether, ready to produce at the different moments they are needed. Some one should prompt at every rehearsal, and, as far as it is possible to make a rigid rule, no one should be allowed to carry her lines with her, even at the first rehearsal.

The going on with the book in her hand at almost all the rehearsals, and then suddenly being deprived of it at the last one or two, is responsible for a good many serious cases of stage-fright.

Watch your "company," you who are stage managers, to see that they don't all huddle together in one part of your improvised stage and so spoil the "balance."

OLD-FASHIONED NECKLACES AND ANTIQUE JEWELS ARE NOW THE FAD

HAT elbow sleeves are responsible for the present vogue of bracelets is pretty well known; but just what brought necklaces and jew-eled collars in nobody knows.

However, they come in, they are wonderfully becoming, and, in consequence, they are in with a vengeance.

Exquisite ones come, fit for a queen, and as rich and costly as gold and gems can make them. But we've got over the feeling against "Paris jeweiry," and wear it as frankly and as freely as it is worn all eyer the continent of Europe.

Among the necklaces set with real gems almost everything is modeled after old-time jewelry, and the old jewelry itself was never more popular, even when it was first high in fashion.

Those old-time necklaces of dull silver, with stones given an odd, dull look by time, are most artistic, and are hard to find. Oddly shaped pendants add to their beauty-relics of a period when pendants were necessary to the style of every sort of thing, from brooches and bracelets to necklaces.

Slim chains, woven in front into a lattice-work of fine links, are perhaps the most becoming of all the new necklaces, especially for that type of neck which is smooth and white, but just faintly shows those two little "knobs." In the lattice-work, where the fine chains intersect, stones are set—birthstones being the favorites.

An interesting necklace is really more like a collar than a necklace. It is just two chains joined, at intervals, by great eval stones. Worn over the collar of a dress, or on the bare neck, it is a most striking style.

The same idea is carried out in a longer necklace—the first fits closely around the throat—set with (ewer stones, and those graduated, the largest being directly in front.

As to the odd Egyptian styles, there is no end to them. Curious designs, made of odd, swirling lines, are executed in metal—silver and gold seeming equally good, and set with opal-matrix, and with every sort of stone that will take on strong blues and greens. The bits of opal matrix are the darker bits, those which are a subtle mixture of blue and violet and green, with an occasional flash of fire.

Wonderful things are done with coral. Pendants, carved like old Egyptian mummy cases gruesome in though, but quaintly artistic when actually madehang from the simplest of chains, the heaviest directly in front and the others balancing the sides.

In the bead world, Paris has taken a