HEALTH OR SICKNESS!
CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS
The blood furnishes the material of every nerve, muscle, gland and fibre in the human frame. When pure, it secures health to every organ; it necessarily produces disease. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS operate directly upon the elements of the stream of life, neutralizing the principle of disease, and thus radically curing the malady, whether seated in the stomach, the liver, the bowels, the joints, the muscles, the skin, the brain, or any other part of the system.
USED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are equally efficacious in complaints common to the whole human race, and in disorders peculiar to certain climates and localities.
ALARMING DISORDERS.
Dyspepsia, and derangement of the liver, the source of infirmity and suffering, and the cause of innumerable deaths, yield to these curatives, in all cases, however aggravated, acting as a mild purgative, alterative and tonic; they relieve the bowels, purify the fluids, and invigorate the system and the constitution at the same time.
GENERAL WEAKNESS—NERVOUS COMPLAINTS.
When all stimulants fail, the renovating and bracing properties of these Pills give freedom to the shaking nerves and enfeebled muscles of the victim of general debility.
DELICATE FEMALES.
All irregularities and ailments incident to the delicate and sensitive organs of the sex are removed or prevented by a few doses of these pills, but inflexible alteratives. No mother who regards her own or her children's health should not have them within her reach.
SCIENTIFIC ENDORSEMENTS.
The London "Lancet," the London Medical Review, and the most eminent of the Faculty in Great Britain, France and Germany, have eulogized the Pills and their inventor.

THE SISTERS.
Once upon a time, there was a King and a Queen who had two daughters, the eldest called Melissa the youngest Fennete. One day their god-mother, who was a fairy, called to her two princesses, and addressed them thus:
"My children, for many years I have watched over you with a mother's care. I now find myself obliged to leave you forever, but ere I go I wish to perform for you one last act of love. Follow me! So saying, the fairy turned and set forth towards the rising sun. And the two princesses, wondering at her words, followed her steps, until they arrived at the foot of a mountain, where the fairy paused and bade them look around them. And they obeyed.
Two roads leading right and left branched off from the foot of the mountain. That on the right was narrow, hard, and full of rocks, thorns, and brambles, and the end was lost in a dense cloud, so black, so ominous, that the young princesses drew back in horror. The road to the left was broad, smooth, and pleasant, and strewn with flowers. Roses grew by the wayside—birds sang gaily, keeping time to the dashing music of crystal fountains, that glistened all along the way. Dim, vapory clouds of gold and crimson shrouded its ending from the eyes.
"My children, begin the fairy, those two paths are both open to you. That on the right, though difficult to travel—though the thorns may tear your flesh, yet leads to the Garden of Peace, where ease and sorrow are no more. That on the left, fair as it looks to the eye, leads to the River of Da-knees, where gloom and desolation shall forever dwell. Now make your choice!"
"This for me, then," cried Melissa, turning into the broad path, "so far a path must end in joy. Come my sister!"
"Nay, sister Fennete, I shall go toward the Garden of Peace. The path may be rough, but I shall reach my goal. The path may be rough, but the princess, fixing her eyes on the far off cloud, set out for the Garden of Peace.
A young girl, fair, frail and spiritual, sat reading this tale aloud. Now she had her book down and turning to her companion, a maiden of brilliant beauty, whose crimson cheeks, flashing black eyes, and full red lips, bespoke a passionate, fiery nature, she said:
"Leone! I have been wondering to-day, if you and I had been those princesses, which path would we have chosen?"
"I should have done as Melissa did," replied Leone, tossing back the raven curls from her broad, bold brow; "no narrow, thorny paths for me. I shall ever wander among roses."
"And had in the time of Darkness," said the other, half sighing, Leone, I can see it all—There is a deep moral to this tale. Our path through life must lead either way—which shall we choose? The one will end in the Valley of the Shadow of Death, and the other in Heaven."
"Now, Rose, don't afflict me with a sermon," said Leone, turning impatiently in his chair.
It was a large dim shadowy room in which the sisters sat. Heavy dark curtains draped the lofty windows, and excluded the wild shrieks of the winter wind. The rich soft carpet, large, quiet old-fashioned chairs, dim, strange pictures, and very costly hangings, bespoke boundless wealth. There was no light in the room, save the red, flickering uncertain glow of the fire, that cast fantastic shadows all around, and vainly strove to penetrate the gloom.
Rose sometimes sat in her large old chair—her thoughtful grey eyes fixed on the fire. Very sweet and fair she looked, with the wavy golden hair falling from the pale intellectual brow. No one would have called her beautiful; she was too slight, too fragile, too pale for that, and yet there was something far, far higher than mere beauty that shone from her clear eyes. A noble soul, free and untrammelled, without 'one stain of earth' was hers.
Very, very different looked Leone, with her fiery intensity, black eyes flashing, and sparkling like diamonds; her wealth of raven hair falling in heavy masses over her rounded shoulders—her exquisitely voluptuous figure and finely formed hand, the very embodiment of pride and of beauty, yet a beauty of all other kinds.
"To-morrow we must part, sister Leone," said Rose, raising her clear eyes to the bright, dark face beside her; "when in your far distant abode, I can almost fancy I see those two paths before me, and now is the time to choose. In which will you walk when far from home, Leone?"
"How silly you are Rose!" said Leone impatiently. "I have not already told you the path I look as though my path led through thorns? And she glanced proudly at the reflection at the beautiful face mirror gave forth.
"And the end, Leone?"
"Do walk, Rose. I protest you are the most drowsy creature I ever knew. Why, how late is it!" she added, as the great clock struck 11. "I am going to bed. Good night!" And Leone swept from the room with the meek of an empress.
Once, twice, thrice, the clock struck again—yet Rose still sat gazing dreamily into the bright candle. Could she see there two distinct paths through life, both as full of darkness?
Who may tell?
Month after month glided by, and the three years allotted Leone to remain at school were past and gone. Rose received her education at home. She was too frail and delicate to be entrusted to strangers, and amid the shadowy charm of the old manor house, and the dim, dark fire, she had reached the age of sixteen.
But of late Rose had been studying another lesson, one that brought the rich light to her eloquent face—that kindled a new light in her eyes—that made her heart beat at the sound of a well-known footstep, and thrill at the rich tones of an eloquent voice—a lesson she had learned gazing in the blue eyes of Walter Montrose.
—Mr. Montrose looked upon the growing attachment of his daughter and the life of the old manor house with a gloomy eye.
"It was a warm happy midsummer afternoon, and the sun's rays fell temperately through the leaves of the old ivy over the meek to whom she sat in her little room beneath their shade.
"And so you love me my sweet Rose?" said

AMERICAN HOUSE,
RE-ESTABLISHED ON THE OLD PLAN OF MANAGEMENT.
LEWIS RICE, Proprietor, respectfully announces that he has resumed the old plan of management as it existed before the recent alterations. Trial of the European system in this Hotel, proves, that although the alterations are great, yet the plan is better adapted for the smaller class of hotels.
The accommodations and conveniences of the House are unimpaired, and the recent improvements and alterations, for the comfort of guests, have nothing to be desired.

IMPORTANT TESTIMONIAL.
Sir—It is with much pleasure I have to inform you of the benefit I received from your Lozenges. I was attacked with the cough, during which time I had a violent cough, so that it kept me awake the greater part of the night. A friend presented me to a box of your COUGH LOZENGES, which I did not expect to say, but with only one box of your valuable compound I was quite free from cough.
You can make what use of this you please, for I think such valuable medicine ought not to go untried.
I remain, Sir, your obedient Servant,
